DEATH OF GENERAL TODLEBEN.

Franz-Eduard Todleben, the famous Russian General, whose death took place at Wiesbaden on Wednesday, was born at Mitau, in Courland, on May 20, 1818. The son of a tradesman, he was sent to school in Riga, and was afterwards admitted a student of the Institute of Engineers at St. Petersburg, where his name is now to be seen in letters of gold, with the inscription "Sebastopol, 1854-5." He entered the Army in due course, but at first his promotion was not rapid. He took part in the expedition to the Caucasus in the years 1847-50, and had his first experience of practical military engineering in the siege of some of the strong places of the mountaineers. On the outbreak of the war between Russia and Turkey in 1853, he was first attached as Adlatus to Gen. Schildner-Schuldner, and took a prominent part in the unsuccessful siege of Silistria. The failure of that siege was, however, in no respect due to Todleben, and when, in the following year, the Allies invaded the Crimea, it was to him that the task of providing for the defence of Sebastopol was entrusted. At that time Sebastopol was strongly defended towards the sea, but was practically open on the land side. Six powerful casemated forts, mounting 850 guns, commanded the seaward approach; but not one of these, not even the great Fort St. Nicholas, with its 186 guns, was of any service against an enemy advancing from the land. Consequently, when the Allies marched upon the city from the Alma, they found no complete preparations to resist them, and it was commonly believed that Sebastopol might have been taken by a coup de main. But, just as was the case when the Versaillist troops entered Paris in May, 1871, the opportunity was of short duration, and once lost, did not recur. In an incredibly short space of time the English and French batteries were confronted by earthworks of the most formidable kind. The round white stone tower, which had been the chief and almost the only landward defence, was quickly surrounded with earthworks, at which men, women, and children were seen to be labouring day and night, and the tower itself was rapidly connected by a line of earthworks with a strong redoubt on the right, afterwards well known as the Redan. Batteries—especially those which are still remembered under the names of the "Barrack," "Garden," and "Flagstaff" batteries—were soon in position, and every day added to their strength and number. It is not necessary here to tell over again the story of the siege, of the weary months of waiting, of the ravages of sickness, of the repeated bombardments of Inkerman and Balaklava, of the capture of the Malakhoff, and the unsuccessful assault on the Redan. It is enough to say that the Russians, under the guidance of Todleben, kept the powerful-allied armies and fleets at bay from Oct., 1854, to Sept., 1855; and that even after the Malakhoff had been taken, and the town nearly destroyed by the bombardment, they were able to withdraw their army to the northern side almost without loss. Well might Prince Gortchakoff, in his general order, say to his troops, "It is a fact unexampled in military annals, that a town hastily fortified in the presence of the enemy should have been able to hold out so long against a force, the means of attack of which have exceeded everything that hitherto could have been foreseen in calculations of this nature." Unhappily, Todleben himself—who had planned and conducted the whole defence, and who during the year had passed by rapid steps from the grade of captain to that of major-general, and had received the high decoration of St. Andrew—did not go through the siege unharmed. On June 20, 1855, he was severely wounded in the foot. He was, however, able to superintend the defences of Nicolaieff and to inspect and strengthen those of Cronstadt before the war ended. The next years he spent as a highly-placed officer might be expected to spend the years of peace. He visited Germany in 1856, and inspected the principal fortresses. In the same year he came to England, where he was very cordially received. In 1860 he was made Lieutenant-General, Chief of the Department of Engineers at the Russian Ministry of War, and assistant to the Grand Duke Nicholas. We hear little of him, however, till the next great occasion on which Russia was called upon to put forth all her strength—the war of 1877. It will be fresh in our readers' memory that, after the successful passage of the Danube, and after various occurrences which seemed to imply that the advance upon Constantinople was destined to be a mere "military promenade," the Russian army was suddenly arrested before the extemporised fortress of Plevna. Osman Pasha took possession of that place on July 14, with 36 battalions and 44 guns. Instantly throwing up earthworks he found himself able to repulse the Russians on July 20 and again on July 31 with great slaughter. The attacking army waited for reinforcements, and again advanced on Sept. 11—the Czar's birthday—only to be hurled from battery and redoubt with appalling loss. The fortunes of the war seemed changed indeed, and both the Russians themselves and skilled observers all over the world began to talk of a retreat across the Danube, a levée en masse, and a second campaign. Then it was that the Emperor and the incompetent Court Generals around him remembered that the Russian Army contained a man who might yet save them, one of the greatest engineer officers in the world. They sent for Todleben, who was living, if not in disgrace, at least outside the sunshine of Imperial favour. He was bidden to invest Plevna. He arrived on Sept. 28, and at once began regular siege operations. Osman had been victualled from Sofia; but after the beginning of November he received no more supplies. By that time he was completely invested; Gourko and his cavalry blocked the roads; he could neither get out nor could food come to him. No Turkish Army came to his relief. He determined to make the attempt to break out, and made it on the night of Dec. 9, with 32,000 men. But after a gallant struggle his men began to lay down their arms, and he surrendered. He and his men were marched through the snow to the Danube, many thousands dying on the way. Gen. Todleben had thus shown himself to be indispensable; and accordingly, after the deficiencies of the Grand Duke Nicholas had been still further proved by the events of the winter and the spring, he was appointed, in April, 1878, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Army of Bulgaria. It was under his command that the advance upon Constantinople was made; and after the signature of the Treaty of San Stefano, and, in fact, till the evacuation of Turkish territory was completed, he remained at Adrianople as Administrator-in-Chief of the occupied provinces. In 1879 he was appointed Governor-General of Odessa, with extraordinary powers against the Nihilists. There was some talk, after the first battle of Geok Tepé, of sending him into Central Asia; but this command was ultimately given to his brilliant junior, Gen. Skobeleff. For the last four years Gen. Todleben—who was made a Count after the events of 1877-78—lived in comparative retirement, his health having greatly failed. His death leaves a gap in the Russian Army which it will be impossible to fill.

UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

Major Graves, 20th Hussars, read an interesting paper on "The Functions of Cavalry in Modern War," at the United Service Institution on Wednesday last. In a comprehensive retrospect, the lecturer traced the changing functions of cavalry in action, from the first instances of its employment of which we have authentic records, through the wars of the Greeks and the Romans, the Feudal System and the Crusades, to modern times. This historic sketch was not restricted to European armies, but comprised notices of Assyrian, Scythian, Chinese, Persian, Tartar and Saracen horsemen. Arguing from the experience of recent campaigns, Major Graves maintained that the importance of cavalry, as an element in the armies of civilised nations, has not been materially lessened. The constantly-increasing range and accuracy of artillery and small arms have indeed restricted the action of cavalry, and necessitated much greater regard to protecting features of ground. Still, many occasions have occurred in recent wars, in which cavalry, led with judgment and daring, materially influenced, if it did not actually decide, the fate of battles, and others will doubtless occur in future. The increasing importance of cavalry for outpost duties, for concealing movements, and for following up successes, was exemplified with much clearness. The lecturer, while fairly enthusiastic for the branch of the service to which he belongs, frankly admitted that the numbers killed and wounded by cavalry were comparatively small; but he said its uses should not be thus measured, for the chief results of successful cavalry charges were to demoralise infantry, to break up its formations, and to stop or lessen the destructive effects of its fire. Of 65,160 Germans killed in the Franco-German war, only 218 died by the sword or clubbed musket! We were not told that any were bayonetted, but, surely, in the many hand-to-hand encounters in villages and enclosures, some must have been killed by the bayonet, notably at Bazeilles and Le Bourget. Lord Waveney made some observations, concurring generally in the views of the lecturer. Colonel Milne-Home gave some particulars of his experiences in Egypt with the Household Cavalry. Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. FitzWygram (the chairman) said the advantages of an impenetrable screen of outposts were by no means one-sided; for if such precautions were effectively taken by both armies, each would be unable to discover the position and movements of the other, and mutual surprises, like some mentioned in the paper, would occur. Major Graves will read the second part, on the duties of cavalry in retreat and pursuit, and when dismounted, on Wednesday next.

ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION.

The Marquis of Londonderry, Col. 2nd Durham Artillery Volunteers, President of Council of the National Artillery Association, has written to the Morning Post to say "that the Council of the National Artillery Association are most anxious to accept, on behalf of the Volunteer Artillery, the invitation from the Canadian Association. That Association has already sent, on two occasions, detachments to Shoeburyness, and it is expected that the visit will be repeated next year. The sum of £1,000 is required to defray the expenses of sending 22 men and three officers to Canada, and the Prince of Wales has made a handsome donation to the fund. The Lord Mayor and Corporation, and gentlemen connected with the Association, have promised over £300. The Council of this Association on June 16 forwarded a circular to all commanding officers of artillery volunteers, but very few replies have been received. Lord Londonderry observes, until the Council is made acquainted with the wishes of the Artillery Volunteers, it is impossible for them to take action in the matter, notwithstanding the liberal support they have already received. I cannot but think a certain amount of discredit will attach to us if, with 50 brigades of volunteer artillery in this country, we have to decline the Canadian invitation through the apathy of the artillery corps."

ROYAL HIBERNIAN MILITARY SCHOOL.

The interesting ceremony of the distribution of the Crimean Banquet Fund prizes took place on Tuesday. Col. Hill read the report. The establishment of boys is 410; since last report 110 boys have joined to fill the following vacancies:—81 caused by volunteers to the Army, 28 by boys withdrawn by their friends, and one by death. By the latest completed returns received from battalions and corps there were serving in the army 970 of all ranks who had been educated at this school. Of these 22 had obtained commissions, 25 were warrant officers, 20 were quartermaster-serjeants, 26 troop serjeant-majors or colour-serjeants, 12 serjeant drummers or serjeant trumpeters, and 172 sapper gunners or privates. These returns show a high percentage of the Hibernian Military School boys serving in the Army to have risen to various positions, and added to the fact that of the 970 serving in the Army, the characters are reported as 408 very good, 521 good or fair, 30 indifferent, and only 11 bad, is very satisfactory. Col. Dease then presented the prizes. This portion of the proceedings having terminated, the company proceeded to the grounds, where some 270 of the boys went through a variety of military manœuvres, including gunnery exercises, all of which they executed in a manner which called for the highest praise.

The Globe says:—"A gratifying recognition was publicly made on Thursday of the services of one of the most deserving bodies of men that ever worked for any town or country. The Duke of Cambridge declared—and no one will doubt the heartiness of the spirit in which he spoke—that it was as pleasant a duty as had ever devolved upon him to distribute to the officers and men of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade the medals decreed to them for past good conduct. The recipients of these medals had for the most part been long in the service, some of them for 30 years and more, and during that time it is not too much to say that they have lived a life of constant over-work and danger. The Duke was not overstating the case when he observed that the individual men decorated most thoroughly deserved the honour, and that the whole force collectively does its work with a determination and gallantry worthy of the highest praise. The public will sympathise with the Com.-in-Chief in this cordial appreciation of the bravery of the men under Capt. Shaw's command, and will be glad that the duty of awarding the medals should have been entrusted to the chief of our active military force. There is in the action as well as in the discipline of the brigade a great deal that savours of war, with its excitement and horrors, and upon this ground alone a soldier must be the best man to address public congratulation to the firemen. But it is also to be remembered that the country of which London is so important a part owes as much in one way to the Brigade as it does to the Army in another. Indeed, the individual merit of the fireman is greater, for while he exposes his life to danger, he has none of those intervals of peace and comparative leisure enjoyed by the soldier. He is attracted by little of the tinsel and glitter that attract the latter, and is encouraged in his arduous labours more by the high idea of duty and humanity than by any pecuniary advantages or selfish objects."

According to the Morning Post, Major Curzon intends on Monday to ask the Marquis of Hartington whether any officer who failed to pass his examination for promotion in January, 1884, will, if he passes the new simplified examination, be allowed to resume his former position in his regiment above those junior to him who did pass the examination in January, 1884, and have been promoted over him.

OUR ROYAL FAMILIES.

Mr. Joseph Foster has given such a tremendous dressing to the Ulster King of Arms, and has adopted with such enthusiasm the scathing language in which Mr. Freeman has denounced "the hideous nonsense and the absurd tales which fill the pages of Sir Bernard Burke," that we shrink from the possible consequences of applying his canons of criticisms to his own work. But in the handsome volume entitled "The Royal Lineage of our Noble and Gentle Families, together with their Paternal Ancestry," privately printed at Aylesbury, Mr. Foster has made so many statements causing, as the French say, to reflect, that we must point out a few which deserve the attention of the general public. We cannot go beyond Edward I., although Mr. Foster in some of his genealogies starts with Edward the Confessor. But as a general point d'appui on which to depend his astounding genealogies he takes Edward I., crowned 1274, and Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Ferdinand III. of Castille! Mind, we do not question one of them. But seeing how much Mr. Foster has made out of those that he has traced, and that nearly every one of the genealogies branches out and develops into swelling pedigrees which are not traced, we must fain believe that a very large proportion of the population of these kingdoms is at the present moment derived from Edward I. and Eleanor of Castille! What may be done by researches like Mr. Foster's in France and Spain, and other parts of the world, we do not presume even to guess; but they would be little less than stupendous. The index of names is a curiosity, although, perhaps, the gentlemen of the College of Arms, who pass their lives in studying such matters, would find it mere every-day history. Of course, we do not, as we have said, discredit any of the claims preferred by Mr. Foster for the ladies and gentlemen he names to Royal descent; and as the Royal Family of England of to-day derive their origin and trace their descent from the ancient kings of this realm, the number of kinsfolk and of consanguineous connections which crop up in Mr. Foster's book might make any one else entitled to be proud of the deeds of their ancestors in the more direct line than the members of the House of Hanover, and feel considerable satisfaction at the exploits of their distant relatives. The list—it is a very long one—in the index does not include the names of those who are deceased; but there are ten large pages in double columns containing such names as Adams and Anderson, Smith, Jamieson, Brown; Mrs. Bailey, of Bally Arthur; Sir F. B. Dillon, of New Zealand; Sir O. Burne; Mrs. Burton (wife of the Hadji); Sir Thomas Buxton; Sir George Clark; Admiral Commerell, Cumberland, the dramatist; Mrs. Downey, Eliza G. Duck, Lord Ellenborough; Mr. Falloon; the Knight of Kerry; Lucy Charlotte Fowler; the Lady Mayoress of London for this present year; Mrs. Gildea; Mrs. Goodlake; several Gordons; plenty of Haighs and Hanburys; some Kellys, "Mrs. Lambert, of the County Mayo"; many Lows and Lowthers and Lushingtons; some Mackenzies and Maclachlans; Mrs. Munday; Major Christopher Musgrave; Mr. C. O'Burne; Miss C. O'Keife; Lady Pease; two families of Prendergast; Mrs. Tighe; Sir Arthur Wiltshire; Lord Wolseley, with innumerable collaterals and connections sprung from the same stock, all of the Blood Royal. Several of these genealogies are derived through Irish families; others through Scotch. In the case of Admiral Commerell, the line is traced from fons et origo, Edward I. and Eleanor of Castille, through Joan of Acre (not of Arc); Piers Gavestone, Stafford of Grafton; Miss Taylor; Hanbury of Kelmarsh; and Bosanquet, of London, whose daughter married J. W. Commerell, of Hanwell, from whom sprang the distinguished Naval officer who has illustrated our late annals by so many services. Lord Wolseley's line commenced with Edward I. and Eleanor as usual, but comes down through Lionel of Antwerp, who married the heiress of the Earl of Ulster, and then is traced through various Lewknors, two Wroughtons, of Wilts, a lady of whose family married Sir Robert Wolseley in 1646; whence descended Richard Wolseley, of Carlow, the immediate ancestor of Major Garnet Joseph Wolseley, who married an Irish lady, the daughter of Mr. Smith, of Golden Bridge, and was the father of the present Lord. Altogether, the book and some of the eccentric matter of which we have given no idea, must possess very considerable attractions for those whose tastes lie in that way, and who delight in genealogical mysteries and riddles. And be it observed that that is only part of the general scheme, the object of which would seem to be to prove, as we have said, that the great bulk of the people who have names at all at the present day in her Majesty's dominions may claim kith and kin with the descendants of the Blood Royal of England. One of these genealogies relating to a lady whom we shall not name, who lives quietly in London, tells us that she was descended from Humphrey de Bohun, we presume before he was killed, and so through the Butlers of Ormond and the O'Reillys, Lords of Cavan, Mulrooney O'Carran, and MacMurray Cavanagh, Gerald FitzGerald, Donough O'Brien, and so on, subsiding at last into a mild outflow of parsons, and doctors, and rectors, who seem to have perpetuated the race most plentifully.

THE RESERVE SQUADRON.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Kirkwall, July 1, 1884.

The Squadron arrived here on Sunday afternoon, the 29th ult., a day before their due date, having left Heligoland at 4 p.m. on the 23rd ult. The passage was a remarkably fine one as regards wind and sea, so that no further opportunities have occurred for judging of the Hecate's performance in a sea-way. When at Heligoland, however, at anchor, when there was a fresh breeze and some sea on, she shipped a considerable amount of water, a good deal of which leaked underneath the superstructure, causing no little discomfort to those below. This is a novel and somewhat undesirable performance in a sea-going ship in harbour; but even with our present experience of the Hecate, and of the impression her behaviour at sea has made on her captain and the Admiral-Superintendent, there can be little doubt that this type of vessel will be irrevocably condemned as a sea-going ship, and that no more of her class will be fitted with a superstructure. The Admiral made the signal "exercise action" at about 1 a.m. on June 26, a matter which elicited frequent growls from Jack, as all the ships had already been to night-quarters once during the past three months, and the British tar does not approve of being aroused from his slumbers for this exercise more than the regulation number of times in the year. The whole of the 26th ult., both forenoon and afternoon, was occupied with steam-tactics, which were, on the whole, creditably executed; and there is little doubt that before the end of the cruise the valuable experience which will be gained by the executive officers in manœuvring their ships will be exhibited in some improvement on the present manner of keeping station in the Fleet. At present no two ships appear to be able to maintain an equable speed, the consequence of which is seen in the fact that every one of the eight-master vessels is invariably either getting ahead of her station or dropping astern of it. The executive officers of these ships are constantly being changed, with the result that few of them know anything about their ships until the termination of the cruise. After steam-tactics had been finished, plain sail was made to a fresh breeze, the Penelope being again, on this occasion, first; while the Hercules was a very bad last; in fact, nowhere at all. On the forenoon of the 27th, the whole of the Squadron separated for target-practice for the Coastguardsmen, who are annually made to fire four rounds from each gun for the purpose of keeping up their knowledge. The morning of the 28th brought the inevitable fog, which seems to linger round these northern shores; the speed of the Squadron was accordingly reduced to four knots, steam sirens sounded every five minutes, a half-hour gun fired from the Hercules, and Rear-Admiral Cator's alarm-buoy towed astern from each ship. The latter did not prove a great success, as the sounds emitted by it were but indistinctly heard by the next ship astern; and were the latter to drop at all or lose her station in the fleet, the alarm-buoy would prove perfectly useless. The fog lifted the same afternoon, and we were enabled to get through our usual evening evolution aloft. Land was sighted early on Sunday forenoon, and as the Squadron had not decreased their speed, it was quite evident the Admiral had made up his mind to anchor that day, even though we were ahead of our programme. About 2 p.m. the Squadron formed into columns of divisions line ahead, and in this formation arrived and anchored in Kirkwall Harbour, where we found the Hawk, which had been sent on the day before to pick up our mails, and the gunboat Firm. Yesterday, the Admiral gave the Valiant a rigid inspection, which lasted till 4 p.m., and to-day he has performed the same duty on board the Defence; he has not expressed his sentiments with regard to either ship, which are presumably in as good a condition as obsolete old vessels, half-manned for nine-tenths of the year, and overcrowded with numbers of Coastguardsmen fresh from the dolce far niente of the shore, for the other one-fifth, can reasonably be expected to be. The Admiral evidently does not intend to permit any of the time at the disposal of the Squadron to be wasted. Yesterday, the boats were away firing and exploding spar-torpedoes and ground-mines for last quarter's practice, while to-day the same duty is being performed with the present quarter's. The weather is very cold and bright here at present, while at night-time it is quite light enough to read on deck in the beautiful, clear night-light of these northern latitudes. The members of the Orkney Club have very kindly placed their comfortable club-house at the disposal of the officers of the Squadron, and to-day a picnic to the officers has been given by Gen. Burrowes on his property, fishing in abundance being provided for those who have availed themselves of this kind offer. The Argus conveyed the officers who accepted this invitation this morning to Gen. Burrowes' estate, and returns with them in the evening. Large numbers of visitors have arrived in Kirkwall to-day from the mainland and outlying districts to visit the Squadron, the greater number of whom have gone to the Hecate, which the local newspaper terms "this wonder in modern war-ships." The Squadron will leave on Thursday afternoon, the 3rd inst., for Stornoway, in the Hebrides, arriving there the following day. There has been a slight outbreak of typhoid-fever on board the Hector, her assistant-paymaster having been landed at Heligoland suffering from it. One of her Marine officers is at present down with the same complaint, and will be landed here for treatment.

EGYPTIAN NEWS.

In accordance with the latest orders received from London, Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. C. A. Stephenson has to be consulted in all movements of the Egyptian Army.

Leave of absence has been granted to Brig.-Surg. W. B. Ramsbotham, A.M.D., to August 21.

Capt. Hotham, R.A., is proceeding on leave of absence to England, on transfer to I-B Baty.

Major Molyneux, of the Egyptian Army, is recovering from the illness which he contracted at Assouan.

Indian Notes.

A hard case under the leave rules has just occurred. Colonel —— left India on 60 days' privilege leave, but returned 14 days after the due date. He applied for an extension on general leave, but general leave out of India, or furlough in continuation of privilege leave, is inadmissible. Rule 32 of the Furlough Rules of 1868 admits of privilege leave being converted into furlough, but Colonel —— had since been allowed furlough on private affairs. Therefore, his absence is held to be without leave.

Consequent on the increasing number of British soldiers electing to proceed to the Colonies on taking their discharge, great inconvenience is frequently experienced in the P. and O. finding accommodation. The men are in consequence sent by other lines, and compelled to wait for passages at Madras and Colombo. To remedy this, the Secretary of State has been moved to cause Madras to be included in the ports specified in the postal contract with the P. and O. Company.

The expedition charged to punish the Hakar Pathans of the Zhob Valley, who raided on Dhuki, will start as soon as the weather permits. The composition of the force has not yet been definitely announced, but Gen. Tanner will be in command.

The fitting and instruction of the several Bengal cavalry regiments in the use and adjustment of the Mackenzie equipment has been postponed until the commencement of the next cold season.

The discontinuance of the practice of employing extra Lascars for the batteries of Royal Artillery and British cavalry on the line of march has been directed.

It has been ruled that a brigadier-general returning to England on vacating a command is not entitled to a free passage for two servants under Par. 449, Transport Regulations, Part I. The paragraph only applies to officers holding the substantive rank of general.

The Pioneer says:—"The composition of the Committee which has been ordered to assemble on the organisation of the Indian Sappers and Miners is as follows:—Col. Hudson, 28th P.N.I., president; Lieut. Hamilton, R.E., Madras; Lieut.-Col. North, R.E., Bombay; and Major L. F. Brown, R.E., second-in-command, Bengal Sappers and Miners. The detailed instructions for the Committee have not yet been drafted, but generally the Committee will have to report on the whole question of the organisation of the Sappers and Miners in India. The Committee will assemble shortly at Roorkee."

Lieut.-Col. Boyle vacates the command of the 11th Bengal Lancers, having held it for nine years.

Col. J. Hudson, C.B., commandant 28th P.N.I., took over command of the Mooltan Brigade on June 6.

There is a probability of the vexatious restrictions upon the general leave of officers in India being abolished. The regulation, as it at present stands, allows an officer to take six months' general leave to half the remote corners of the globe, but reduces his pay should he wish to go to London.

In a telegram, dated June 29, the Times' correspondent says:—"It is reported, apparently on good authority, that owing to the fact of the existing number of cavalry regiments being found insufficient for frontier duty, the Government contemplate the raising of two or three new regiments. It may be remembered that some two or three years ago the number of regiments in the native army was reduced, although the total strength of that army was left intact. If it be true that the Government intends to increase the number of the regiments, it will be generally admitted that this is a step in the right direction. If there be anything regarding which all Indian officers are practically agreed, it is that the Indian Army, European and native, as at present constitued, is wholly inadequate for the threefold duty which it may at any time be called upon to perform—namely, the despatch of a strong corps beyond the frontier, the detailing of another strong corps to hold the frontier and communications, and the provision, in the country, of a force sufficient to overawe the troops of the feudatory States, and the discontented element of the people. The defects of the existing military organisation have long been matter of comment. The subject has recently been brought into special prominence by reason of the rapid advance of the Russians in Central Asia, and it now furnishes matter for almost daily articles in all the Anglo-Indian journals. There is a concensus of opinion on most points. Thus it is admitted that the short-service system supplies India with an inefficient and costly European garrison, and that the local European regiments of the Company's days should be revived; or, at any rate, that soldiers for Indian service should be enlisted for a period of 12 years. It is admitted, too, that service in the native army should be made more attractive, so as to secure a better class of recruits; that the strength of that army should be very greatly increased; and that steps should be adopted to form a Reserve, by retaining a claim upon the large body of trained soldiers who take their discharge after five years' service. There are also various details which urgently require attention, such as the organisation of a Transport and Commissariat fit to take the field at once. Another step which should be taken without delay is that of insisting upon a reduction of the utterly useless armies maintained by the native States. Many of these armies are badly armed and only half trained, while others are in a high state of efficiency. But be their armament and discipline what they may, the very number of these troops, amounting, as it does, to about 380,000, makes them at all times a source of anxiety, and would have the effect of locking up a large proportion of the British forces in the event of the outbreak of a foreign war.

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

Our Sea Marks. By E. Price Edwards. (Longmans and Co.)

Mr. Edwards gives a plain account of the lighthouses, lightships, beacons, buoys, and fog-signals maintained on our coasts for the guidance of mariners. The work is illustrated with plates, plans, and woodcuts, including the Hartland Point Lighthouse, the North Foreland Lighthouse, comparative elevation above mean sea-level of principal British rock lighthouses, a section of new Eddystone Lighthouse, of Bell Rock and Skerryvore Lighthouses, Douglass seven-wick oil-burner, and Seven Stones Lightship, woodcuts of the mouth of the Thames, Dungeness Fire Tower, Smeaton's Chandelier Eddystone, and about thirty others, all executed with fine effect. In the introductory portion of his volume, Mr. Edwards draws attention to the principal shoals and sandbanks around the British coasts which are formed at the mouths of the rivers Thames, Mersey, Humber, Tees, and Severn, and those established by the action of tides and currents off the Eastern counties of England, known generally as the Yarmouth Sands, the notorious Goodwins, and the extensive sandbanks off the east coast of Ireland. This general statement of the "dangers of the sea" shows the importance of "sea marks;" by means of these it is that the positions of those dangers are pointed out, and the safe channels marked. They also serve the purposes of direction posts, indicating the sea lanes and roads available for maritime traffic, marking turning-points, showing the mariner the way to the haven where he would be, and telling him on what part of the coast he is. The author also very truthfully observes that, on approaching land from over sea, the mariner calculates where he ought to be, but his reckoning may be wrong, or his vessel may have been so driven by winds, tides, and currents that he really is in doubt as to where he is. Few, particularly if they be maritime men, will gainsay the truth of the author's observations,—"In these days, when sea traffic is so enormous, when thousands of vessels come to and sail from our ports, when the darkness of night is no hindrance to sea voyaging, and regardless of opposing influences of wind and tide, gigantic steamers are continually hurrying across the ocean and from all parts of the globe freighted with human lives or valuable commodities, it is very evident that the necessity for effectual sea-marks on all coasts for use both by day and by night is most urgent." The following is a classification of the sea-marks employed on our coasts,—Lighthouses, light-vessels, buoys and unlighted beacons, and fog-signals. Mr. Edwards's work is devoted to dealing with each of these different kinds of sea-marks, and to describing what they are and how they are made useful for marking dangers, or for guiding purposes. There can be no doubt of the practical value of this work on our sea-marks, and we should be very glad to find that the Lords of the Admiralty had directed a copy to be served out to every ship in the Navy.

The closing paper in the July number of the National Review is calculated to attract more than ordinary attention. It deals with a question which at the present time occupies a leading position throughout the councils of Europe,—the question of England's foreign policy. Having pointed to the fact that England's position in Europe must ever be that of a strong, great, and influential sovereign estate, the writer adds that the only point at issue is whether that State will always be entitled to consider itself a Power of the very first magnitude. For a long period of years England had but one enemy to cope with, that was France, "her natural, traditional enemy;" but at length the Napoleonic wars had equally worn out the energies of all European States, and at the same time the ambition of England was to adopt the rôle of a promoter of peace, rather than that of a leader in war. During the time that England's ascendancy was supreme in all European diplomatic councils, it was invariably exercised for the good of France itself; in fact, anything to oblige and propitiate France was England's foreign policy. Such was the infatuation of the English statesmen of the day. Towards the close of the Second Empire, the history of Europe went through unforeseen and portentous phases, which led to the establishment of a new balance of power, and changed at once the position of France with regard to England. Vengeance for Waterloo was forgotten in an insane anxiety to punish Prussia for Sadowa. At the same time, however, a new state of things had arisen for England, as well as for France; the supremacy on the Continent had passed from Paris to Berlin. By the side of Russia and Germany, England was no longer a great nation; she was not so numerically, and still far less so in her military organisation. France finds that she is not yet a match for "united Germany." She wants aid, she is looking for allies, and where can she find them but in Russia or England. The author of this paper then points out the danger of such a scheme of policy. "England tried France's friendship in the Crimea, when she was made to begin a war for which she was not prepared, and to accept a peace to which she was not inclined." She tried at Schleswig-Holstein, when France put an enormous and iniquitous price on her aid before she would make up her mind to lend it. She is now trying it in Tunis, in Madagascar, in Morocco, in Tonquin, and on the west coast of Africa. The next idea that presents itself is an alliance between Russia and England. As well talk of the alliance of Rome and Carthage. There will be internecine war between Russia and England when they meet on a common element. The writer next points out what he considers ought to have been done by England long ago. "She should have fought for Denmark in 1866; she should have fought for Turkey ten years later; she should have fought for Egypt at the present juncture; she should fight now against all her enemies,—against France, if necessary; against Italy, against Turkey, and Russia; she should fight, at all events, when she engages to fight." If this military programme is to be carried out by England in its entirety, and if a little Irish rebellion, already cut and dry, be imminent, there can be no doubt that the hands of England will be fully occupied. This pitiable state of things is attributed to the pernicious courses indulged in by the statesmen now at the head of affairs in England. In concluding this ably written article, the writer points out how the safety of India lies in the fate of Egypt, and how the rule over India is England's existence, and thus denounces the present foreign policy of England. "It is the silliest policy,—an old man's feeble, fussy, faltering policy,—a policy disavowed and denounced by every manly man in the Cabinet; and, however, backed by the reluctant vote of a browbeaten and bewildered Parliament, sure to be repudiated and execrated by the ultimate verdict of an indignant nation."

Colburn's United Service Magazine.—The number opens with "A Voice from the Ranks," contributed by "Red Coat." A great deal of military matter has been recently brought before the public in articles and papers, some of which (witness Capt. White's pamphlets) have done good service. However, there still seems to be a desire to hear some opinions or facts uttered from "the ranks," and it is to gratify these wishes that the present article has been written. The writer tells us he was educated at one of our public schools, was prevented by family reasons from trying for a commission, went into business, but soon tired of it, enlisted when 25 years of age, is now a colour-serjeant, has three and a half years' service, and, we may add, knows how to express his own ideas. After reviewing the question, he thus concludes:—"The thing that puzzles us and vexes us most of all is that every one of the so-called Army reforms and alterations originate among the civilian clerks in the War Office, and that if the Duke and his Military advisers had their way, the Army would be a man's home, as it used to be in the old 'corrupt' days, when regiments belonged to themselves, and were not splashed about in different pieces among Line, Militia, and Volunteers, when officers were neither drill-instructors nor book-worms, and when the Army had no advantages to boast of." There are several new papers, in addition to further instalments of "Naval Volunteers," and James Grant's "Colville of the Guards," and "Marshal Bugeaud," by Col. Knollys.

With two chapters more of admirable Clark Russell's briny salt story, "Jack's Courtship," as crisp and bright as a sea-piece by Hook, and a well-promising commencement of a picture of American life, "A Bluegrass Penelope," by Bret Harte, the July number of Longman's marvellous sixpenny "Magazine" would be ample value; but it moreover contains the continuation of Mrs. Oliphant's likely novel of "Madam;" a very sympathetic and graceful paper on "Sunny Brighton," by Mr. R. Jeffries; some silly lines by Mr. Lang, which we do not include in the value; a pretty paper on "The First White Butterfly," by Mr. Robinson. A charming review of Major Maurice's life of his father is introduced by an anecdote about the Royal Academy, which the author tells respecting the offer of a picture of the eminent divine to the illuminati of Burlington House, who informed the painter they had never heard of the gentleman!

The Cornhill, of most excellent memory, and full of present work, must be for ever associated with the recollection of Thackeray's editorship and of the golden days when George Smith, "Prince of Publishers," albeit in the republic of letters, as Thackeray said, covered his contributors with the sands of Pactolus; but even with that fierce glare from the past upon it, there is much to admire in the articles—grave and gay—in its pages, and this month's offering is worthy of the antecedents. The "Recollections" are very pleasant, and the "Taglioni" is interesting; "The Talk of the Town" justifies Mr. Payn's popularity; but we cannot say so much in the same sense for the story, which comes to an end, by the author of "Vice Versâ."

That John Bull's Neighbour, in Her True Light, by a "Brutal Saxon," should have reached the twentieth thousand, is some proof that it is agreeable to people in this country to read a coarse imitation of the worst form of French prejudice and anti-English invective. Such productions as these are below criticism; but unfortunately they are capable of making mischief. A "Brutal Saxon," who speaks of France as feminine, certainly treats the lady according to the accounts which are given of matrimonial relations in some of the French journals, justified occasionally by statements in the English papers of what takes place before the police-courts and at the assizes, as if she were a British wife. One elegant extract, perhaps, may suffice:—"By the time Frenchwomen are twenty-four or twenty-five they are as old and not half as active as the generality of our women of thirty to thirty-five. They are burdened with an excess of fat, and are almost invariably as yellow as saffron. The fat is due to want of exercise, and to the immense quantities of saccharine matter a Frenchwoman eats, for she is never happy unless she is drinking eau sucrée, syrups, or munching bon-bons. The yellowness is the result of the want of fresh air and liberal use of soap and water." "A Brutal Saxon" is rather loose in his English, and he appears to state here that yellowness is the result of the liberal use of soap and water. If he goes to the Park, we fear he will see as many skilful productions of art, in the way of brilliant fresh complexions there, as on the Boulevards and in the Bois.

A Treatise on the Application of Wire to the Construction of Ordnance. (Messrs. Spon, Charing Cross.)—Mr. Longridge is a noisy—well, clamorous—"Mem. Inst. Civil Eng.," who thinks the whole world is wrong, and that he is right, about gun-making; and he has summed up his assertions and his theories—formulæ, diagrams, and all—in this book. The old Joe Miller anent the intercourse between the King and his subject—which was confined to his Majesty's request to the latter to get out of his way—illustrates Mr. Longridge's position in respect to the powers that be. Mr. Childers, when Secretary of State, once recognised Mr. Longridge so far as to direct the Ordnance Committee to put a question, to which Mr. Longridge found it impossible to give a categorical answer. Now we confess at once that we are not competent to test Mr. Longridge's problems and formulæ, and that we ignorantly believe his system of ordnance can only be used in composite batteries with the "Hope, Gun of the future"; but we expect that Colonel Maitland will have some formulæ and observations to offer on the principles of construction of the "dangerous rival that is fluttering their hearts at Woolwich and Elswick." Wire is most useful in electric telegraphs, cables, cattle fences, rabbit snares, and the like, and we shall be delighted if Mr. Longridge succeed in making good ordnance out of it.

We have received the Administrative Report of Baroda for 1882, published by order of H.H. the Gaekwar, which gives satisfactory proofs that the excellent system established by the great native statesman, Sir Madhava Rao, has been worked with much success by native officers. The investiture of the present chief of the State is described, and there is an account of the illness and death of the unhappy ex-Gaekwar, whose banishment and enforced residence at Madras after he had been acquitted of the charges brought against him created such a sensation in India, and was treated with such indifference at home at the time.

Foreign Military Literature.

Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine. No. 153.—"The proposal of the French Deputy, M. Delattre, for increasing the Defensive Power of France, by abolishing the Conscription, and creating a Cadre Army," makes at first a curious impression upon the professional soldier; but the more it is studied, the greater becomes the interest. The idea is that of a staff officer, who, in 1866, submitted the scheme to General Colson. The General is said to have expressed a favourable opinion, but to have added that it could only be carried out in a Republic. The war of 1870-71 broke out, in which General Colson was killed, and nothing further was heard of the proposal. M. Delattre says that he drew the attention of the public to the matter in 1877 and 1878 by lectures. At present the proposal is before the Chamber of Deputies. The proposal of M. Delattre consists of two parts,—the first devoted to the increase of the defensive power of the country without having recourse to conscription; the second, to the details of the formation of a cadre army of a peace strength of from 250,000 to 300,000 men. There are "military élèves," of the age of 18 to 20, to the number of 430,000 to 450,000; the "soldats mobiles," aged 20 to 25, numbering 1,000,000; and the territorial army, men from 25 to 35, estimated at 1,500,000. In case of war, the "soldats mobiles" enter the cadre army, which then becomes the field army, the military élèves forming the reserve. The territorial army would be employed as such. In accordance with M. Delattre's plan, the active army would consist of over one million of combatants, which might be mobilised in eight days and despatched to the frontier. The author hopes to save one million francs. The Jahrbücher thinks that it would lead to an increase in the French military budget:—"We admit that the proposal of M. Delattre sounds very beautiful, but it is impracticable. But it will have the effect of still further confusing and unsettling his countrymen with regard to general liability to military service. It will require great pressure on the part of the Government and the War Minister to maintain the present military institutions on the basis of the army reorganisation after the war of 1870-71. It seems as if innovations are awaiting the French Army by the adoption by the Chamber of Deputies of the proposal to reduce service in the army from five to three years. It may be doubted, however, whether the violently-attacked arrangement of one-year volunteer service will be abolished, for lately important voices have been heard for its retention."

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions in Sixteen Languages,—How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

Service Questions in Parliament.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—An important matter was mentioned, as the lawyers say, in the House of Commons on Monday night. The indefatigable Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, with a thirst for information of all kinds quite unslakable, asked whether, in the event of the neutralisation of the Suez Canal, the war vessels of a State with which this country was engaged in hostilities, would have the same right as English vessels of passing through the Canal; and whether the British Government would be able to stop these hostile men-of-war, or to fortify the Canal against possible injury or destruction. Lord E. Fitzmaurice claimed the privilege of answering the question, and, of course, had a little verbal nicety to deal with. He wished to point out that the word "neutralisation," as applied to the Canal, is misleading, the proposal being in the nature of an agreement to secure the free passage of all ships under all circumstances. The British Government would not be able to stop hostile men-of-war in the Canal or its approaches. It is contemplated that provision would be made for the immediate repair of any damage to the Canal caused by a war-vessel at the cost of the Power to which she belonged, but the British Government do not claim the right to fortify the Canal. Dear, innocent, good Lord E. Fitzmaurice! And you really think that in the case of a tremendous conflict, say, for the preservation of India or the safety of our Colonial Empire, the ——. We need not do more than indicate the position.

In reply to Viscount Lewisham, the Marquis of Hartington stated on Tuesday that the 46th Regt. had been ordered to Keneh.

Sir A. Hayter informed Sir J. Lubbock on Thursday that the regulations for military examinations had been amended in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Society and the British Association. The regulations were ready, and would be published shortly; but the scheme would not be brought into operation before the winter examination of next year.

London Amusements.

At the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, sudden changes of programme have occasionally disappointed the musical public. For "Don Giovanni," which was expected to afford a great treat last Saturday evening, "Il Barbière di Seviglia" was substituted, as Signor Cotogni was indisposed, and no other baritone was immediately available. "Carmen" was repeated on Monday, "Romeo e Giulietta" on Tuesday, and "Semiramide" on Thursday. At the German Opera, Wagner's "Tristan" and "Tannhäuser" have figured in the programme; but Stanford's "Savonarola," rehearsed for production last week, is now announced for Wednesday next, the last night but one of the German Opera season.

At the LYCEUM THEATRE, the final performance of "Much Ado about Nothing" has been given this week, and the elaborate revival of "Twelfth Night" will be brought out on Tuesday.

On Monday night Madame Sarah Bernhardt reappeared at the GAIETY in "Fédora," attracting the largest assemblage hitherto attending French plays. On Friday night Madame Sarah Bernhardt played Lady Macbeth for the first time in the metropolis.

On Tuesday, Miss Annie Rose, late of the Lyceum, gave a special matinée at the SAVOY, appearing to great advantage as the Lady Vavir, in Mr. W. S. Gilbert's fantastic fairy play of "Broken Hearts."

At the PRINCE'S THEATRE, on Wednesday afternoon, was played for the first time in London, the drama, founded on facts, called "Deacon Brodie; or, the Double Life."

On Thursday next Mr. J. L. Toole gives a morning and evening performance for his annual benefit, a very attractive performance, having the support of Miss Ellen Terry, Mrs. John Wood, Mrs. Bancroft, Mr. Henry Irving, Mr. John Hare, Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Arthur Cecil, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Mr. Toole promises a few words to his friends as a parting address on the close of his very successful season.

Admiral Selwyn presided on Wednesday at the annual meeting of the Inventors' Institute, the Duke of Manchester being unavoidably absent. The members of the Institute, to the number of 60, assembled at the Health Exhibition in the jurors' room, and were conducted over the buildings by Mr. Mackie. Every invention of public utility was examined, and after a lengthy inspection of the Exhibition, the members of the Institute sat down to a banquet served up in the jurors' room. One of the objects of this Institution is to protect inventors from the encroachments so often made by the Government Departments on their rights, and if it succeeds, even in a small degree, in its object, the Inventors' Institute will be rendering a great service to the public generally, and to naval and military officers in particular. Many of the latter were present on Wednesday.

The Royal Navy List for the present quarter contains the services of all the Naval officers who formed part of the expeditions in the Soudan, besides other information of interest to Naval officers.

Col. P. A. A. Twynam, in command of the 15th Regimental District at Beverley, has been appointed to succeed Col. Lascelles, transferred to Aldershot as A.A. and Q.M.G. at Portsmouth.

THE laborious apologist who has already treated the readers of the Times to his views respecting "Discontent in the Army," continued his labours last Monday. We venture to say he is not a soldier, and that he knows little or nothing about soldiers, except in so far as that he may have had occasion to deal with certain details of Army administration in some comfortable office in London. The off-hand style of the previous article is well maintained in this week's lucubration. "An occasional hardship takes place through the regulations enforcing compulsory retirement at comparatively early periods of life." What of that? "Something like a breach of faith may be complained of by competent men who entered the Army under different conditions, because their career is cut short." What then? "Pecuniary injury cannot be shown except in most rare instances." Therefore there is no injustice. "Substantial benefits have accrued to the great majority,"—wherefore the minority who are injured have nothing to complain of! "Let the officers who have gained by the abolition of purchase devote a little of their money—so much per cent.—to compensate their injured brethren." Then all will be right! Pecuniary grievance is, we suppose, of no consequence when it is "comparative," and not "direct." "Speaking generally, nobody is injured." "Mere whim and sentiment" cause discontent. "When all the fellows are dead who grumble, we will hear no more of them,"—that is really the meaning of the specious "argument"! I, Sir Oracle, declare, "as far as tangible grievances are concerned, there is small room for action" on the part of those I represent,—"the authorities." So far for the officers. As for the soldiers, there is, it appears, good work for the enlightened reformers to whom Sir Oracle belongs. He sets out by declaring that the old long-service system, under which England, practically, from the time we had a standing army at all, established and maintained her military reputation on a solid basis, was nothing less than "a huge failure" We are accustomed to such assertions on the part of the dabblers in "Reform," no matter what portion of the ancient institutions of this country they profess to ameliorate; we maintain that the old system was not a failure, but we admit that the people who worked it were incompetent, and we are sure that if they had applied themselves to the development, in a proper direction, of the system they condemned, they could, at one-tenth of the sum which their reforms cost the country have filled up the ranks of the Army, and have given us an efficient reserve co-existently with a solid first-line, on which, in case of such a war as that with which we were confronted in the early part of 1854, we could depend. But having told us that the old long-service system was a huge failure, the writer admits the new short-service system is a failure too. We would put the words "huge failure" to describe that for which he merely uses the phrase "incomplete success." The new system is, he says, "insufficient to fill the exceptional gaps caused by recent retrogressive errors." What, in the name of all that is plain common-sense and ordinary English, this can mean but deficiencies in the ranks, we cannot understand! As an instance of the slap-dash assertion in the article, let us take the reference to the Guards. He says "that the experiment tried last year shows we can get any number of men for three years' colour service." We say that the experiment did nothing of the kind. Even had it demonstrated the truth of the proposition as regards the Guards, it would have followed by no means that a similar result would have been obtained with regard to Line Regiments. The writer admits that the Army is unpopular. But he throws up an earthwork. He calls it "comparatively unpopular." But if the long-service system was "a huge failure," we must infer it could not be the period before the change which has produced this new "comparative unpopularity." Of course, no one who is acquainted with the Army would tolerate the nonsense with regard to discipline, and the various devices for making the Army more popular with which the writer favours us. But some of these appear to have been introduced for the special purpose of getting a fling at Sir Oracle's pet aversion,—"the distinctive Horse Guards element." The idea of having two sentries on duty at the entrance to the Commander-in-Chief's door, even although that Commander-in-Chief be a Royal personage and a Field-Marshal to boot, appears particularly revolting to him; but if our military censor were to go to any foreign capital, he would see sentries posted outside the quarters, not merely of Royal personages and of high military authorities, but at the hotels, or other places in which they may be quartered, of the Generals on duty. Notwithstanding all the sentries close at hand, a dynamite outrage was perpetrated not long ago directly opposite the entrance to the War Office; and so far from thinking with the writer that sentry duty in London might be considerably diminished, we think there are in some localities reasons for an increase. To the suggestions that soldiers may be allowed to do as they like with themselves at night, that the tattoo be abolished, and that what is called "voluntary return home," or indeed complete absence from barracks, should be allowed, we have nothing to say, except that the suggestion establishes the claim of the reformer to be an amateur with a soul above buttons and discipline. We doubt the propriety of the direction in which the House of Commons has been forcing officers to march, and we venture to assert that officers certainly are better judges even than the Commander-in-Chief himself of the tendencies in the ranks which ought to be met by punishment. It will be a happy time when the "stupid or awkward recruit," without any manners, new to the etiquette of barrack life, having lost his temper, shall be at liberty to address "coarse expletives" and "remarks uncomplimentary to their personal appearance" to corporals or serjeants who may be drilling him. No doubt our reformer would look with a lenient eye on the heaving of half-a-brick "in continuation" of the conduct he extenuates, and would listen with equanimity to the complaint that the man who abused his serjeant had not refrained from addressing Lieutenant, or Captain, or Colonel with "coarse expletives or uncomplimentary remarks." We would view as the complete dissolution of the remnants of our military system any attempt to carry into practical effect the recommendations of this doctor, who undertakes to cure the body politic of our military force of all just cause of discontent by telling the individual members of it that they have nothing to complain of at all. "We do not," forsooth, "regard as very substantial the argument that esprit de corps has anything to do with discontent." "If a man does not like the Army, pass him into the Reserve before the completion of his time." "If a man does not like the Cavalry, let him go into the Infantry." This is a kind of elasticity which is useful and popular! Melancholy rubbish! And yet the readers of the leading journal may take the editor's view of it, and consider it all excellent advice, whereas it is but pretentious fooling. As we said before, the parallel of the line taken by the writer is to be found in Swift's "Tale of a Tub," where Peter presents a loaf of bread to his kinsman, and insists upon its being received as a leg of mutton. We are no favourers of discontent in the Army; but we do not think the mode of dealing with it recommended in the Times is calculated to do anything but add a sense of wrong and indignation to the feeling which aggrieved officers experience. But having so far disagreed in toto with the apologist, we must express our complete concurrence with him in the remark which he makes respecting the discreditable treatment of the soldier after his enlistment. Unless the authorities, whoever they may be, face this question boldly and honestly, and break down the fence which the Treasury officials have erected between the Army and the public, in the matter of fair dealing, there will never be a truly contented Army, and soldiers will have a right to say that faith has been broken with them by the Government of the Queen. Recruits are told that they will get free rations and food without cost. They have to pay for everything but ¾ lb. of meat—which is not sufficient, bone and all, to feed a growing lad—and a pound of bread; and for everything else required as food and rations the man has to pay out of his own pocket. Then, again, he is charged for the clothes which he is obliged to wear out after the first service of his kit. We admit that it would be too much to expect the country to make up to the soldier for carelessness and the wear and tear of his clothing and necessaries not fairly attributable to his work as a soldier; but stoppages to which he is put for articles of first necessity seem needlessly heavy, and a little more liberality under this head would, no doubt, materially advance the soldier's comfort and increase the contentment of the Army.

THE account given last week by our correspondent with the Reserve Squadron of the difficulty found by some of the ships in "keeping station" points to a decided blemish in the course prescribed for a naval officer's education, to which it would be well if some remedy could be found. Keeping accurate station is as much a part of fleet evolutions as a knowledge of letters is to reading, and few will be found with the temerity to deny the necessity for precision in evolutions as necessary for the tactics required in an action with fleets. Yet it is scarcely too much to say that the important subjects of the manœuvring powers both of individual ships and the proper conduct of a fleet are generally left, like Dogberry's reading and writing, to "come by nature" to the naval officer. Attention to the necessity for a practical education in manœuvring has been frequently urged by Admiral Sir A. Ryder, Captain Fitzgerald, and others, who have advocated squadrons of padded gunboats ramming each other and other devices, which we should be glad to see adopted for the education of Sub-Lieutenants and young officers, and which is daily becoming more important, as the practical school of handling sailing ships or boats is more and more a thing of the past. This indeed is a subject of primary importance, and it is certain that more systematic teaching on this, as on other points, obtains in most foreign navies than in our own; but, owing probably to early entry, and perhaps to the national aptitude of English youth for the sea and for outdoor occupations generally, we believe that our officers are certainly not less capable of handling their ships than those of foreign navies. Although, then, we consider that more could be done in this direction by systematic teaching, this is not, we hold, the weakest link in the chain. It will, we think, be universally acknowledged in the Navy that our weakest point, as compared with the French Navy, for instance, will be found in squadron-sailing, fleet-manœuvring, and consequently in naval tactics. These can only be learnt by experience in squadron-sailing and in a study of the signal-book. Owing to the inveterate custom of making the Navy subservient to political and economical considerations, evolutionary squadrons or squadrons of exercise are at best intermittent, and are frequently sacrificed to other so-called necessities; while neither in the examination for Lieutenants in seamanship or at Greenwich is any real attention paid to fleet evolutions or tactics. It is true that in the seamanship examinations there is a heading for knowledge of fleet evolutions; but for obvious reasons, such as the want of knowledge of the passing officers themselves and the impossibility of the candidate having had any opportunity of acquainting himself with such matters, this important question is usually slurred over as of little moment. In what we have said, we do not wish to be understood as inferring that this is a subject which has been more neglected of recent years than formerly, as we are well aware that the contrary is the case; and it is, indeed, mainly owing to its almost entire neglect thirty or forty years ago that so little importance is still attached to it; but how much more is required, and how much truth there is in what we have said, is shown by the cœur leger with which each Government in turn has dropped the Detached Squadron, so necessary as a school for seamanship and squadron-cruising, and the evidently greater stress laid in France, Italy, or Germany than in this country on squadron-sailing. We appreciate, then, highly the annual cruise of the Reserve Squadron; and in the hands of the gallant and efficient Admiral now in command, we do not doubt of its affording valuable instruction to officers of all ranks; but those who are aware of the want to which we have specially called attention, of, the frequent changes of officers in these ships, of how many of the Junior Lieutenants appointed to them as additional for the cruise have had no previous experience, either of charge of a watch in an ironclad or of keeping station, may well feel that the "sweet little cherub" has not had an altogether easy time of it in looking out for poor Jack during his cruise; and we suspect that the Admiralty are conscious of a sensation of relief, when it has been completed, with no untoward accident to remind them of the loss of the Vanguard, or to mar the satisfaction so universally expressed when our First Reserve ships are again snugly berthed at their respective winter moorings.

We recently stated it is likely that the Duke of Edinburgh will give up the command of the Channel Squadron in December, when the Minotaur will be paid off. This announcement was copied in both the Hampshire Telegraph and the Portsmouth Times. It also got into the World, and last week the Portsmouth and Plymouth papers again publish the same news, this time as coming from "Atlas" in the World. "He that steals what is'nt his'n, when he's cotched will go to prison," Mr. "Atlas. "Who steals my purse steals trash," but he who steals from us our news, which much enriches him, ought to confess his crime.

Lord J. Hay arrived at Suez on July 8 in the Helicon, en route to rejoin his flagship at Port Said.

Sir Thomas Brassey has used his influence to good purpose with the Treasury since he has been at the Admiralty, we hear, and it is now generally understood that a capitation grant will be made to the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers. This will enable the corps to increase its numbers, and it will soon become the strongest, if no longer the most select, body of Volunteers in the kingdom.

The retirement of Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald on July 7 brought Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock on to the full Admiral's List, but, as we pointed out in January last, only to enjoy his promotion for one day, as the next, the inexorable law of age retirement, swept this gallant officer for ever off the Active List of the Navy. These two retirements have promoted the Commanders-in-Chief of the Mediterranean and East Indies stations, the former to full, and the latter to Vice-Admiral; Captains Heneage and Sir Walter Hunt-Grubbe being advanced to flag rank. Admiral Chads and Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice will come under the same regulations in October, when, should the former voluntarily retire a day before the latter, additional promotions will ensue, and Captains Rowley and Wells, and possibly Captain T. Le H. Ward, will be advanced to flag rank.

We are not aware what department of the Admiralty is charged with the duty of selecting and forwarding the newspapers which are supplied gratis to the Fleet, but there can be no question that the list requires careful revision. Some of the papers now supplied are quite obsolete, while others are unsuited for the lower-deck. At the present time, out of the many papers forwarded weekly for the amusement and enlightenment of the British Blue-jacket, there is not a single journal connected with the service.

The Admiralty have at last promoted Lieutenant C. J. Barlow, the Senior Lieutenant of the Inflexible. This officer commissioned that ship in July, 1881; the second Lieutenant (the present Commander Pigott) was appointed to the Monarch a short time afterwards as Senior Lieutenant, was promoted for the bombardment of Alexandria, and reappointed to the Inflexible, where, of course, he was placed over his former senior officer. The Commander of the Inflexible having been promoted, the Admiralty felt themselves unable to promote the Senior Lieutenant also, but his name was "favourably noted;" and Lord Alcester, before giving up the command of the Mediterranean station, specially applied for Lieutenant Barlow's promotion, which has at last been granted.

We have received three neatly-printed cards from Mr. T. T. Dickie, of Leeds, relating to what is called by the patentee "a new aqua-aerial or wave-ship, designed to attain railway speed at sea, combined with safety and steadiness; suitable for express, mail, and passenger services, for war-ships, torpedo-boats, yachts, and all cases in which great speed and quick manœuvring are desirable." Furthermore, there are enticing sentences,—"Express speed at sea," "Channel passage in twenty minutes," "New York and back in six days;" and there are diagrams and photographic representations of either a model, or a ship, or an idea in drawings and sections relating to the patent. We have not the least notion of the means by which Mr. Dickie intends to accomplish the results he has in view, nor can we pretend to offer any opinion respecting the validity of the assignments, as lawyers would call them, set forth at the back of the cards; but it seems that the wave-ship is so called because it makes no waves, and that it is called aqua-aerial because there are air-ducts passing through the ship into the water. Altogether, we can only say that after one of Mr. Dickie's vessels has made one or two passages across the Channel or the Atlantic in safety in the time specified, we shall certainly engage a passage at the first convenient opportunity.

It is stated that Rear-Admiral John K. E. Baird has been chosen by the Admiralty to succeed Rear-Admiral Algernon M'L. Lyons in the command of the Pacific station in October. Captain Henry Rose, it is stated, has been selected to act as Flag Captain.

We have repeatedly expressed it as our opinion that her Majesty's uniform does not receive fair treatment by those who have the honour, but consider it most irksome, to wear it. At all times and in all places the officer prefers mufti to uniform. It has, it is true, been deemed right to punish subalterns by ordering them to wear their swords continually for a certain period, and this did add to the innate dislike of the British officer for uniform. In plain clothes he feels more comfortable, and is never stared at by civilians. The Admiralty, however, do not approve of this state of things, and intend to make an attempt to abolish plain clothes altogether in the Navy, except for sporting purposes, or when officers are on long leave. The Chaplain and the Naval Instructor are also to be clothed in armour, and even the newly-fledged members of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors will shortly be able to rejoice in an "iron-bound suit." We hope the uniform will be of a better design than the ships the members of the Royal Corps take credit for.

It is a good thing for the Naval service when officers of different rank meet round the festive board, and can talk over service matters without any restraint or fear of the "superior officer" question cropping up to mar the harmony of the proceedings. We therefore rejoice to see in the list of the members of the "Navy Club" who periodically dine together to celebrate glorious Naval victories and other such anniversaries, the names of the late Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies and of the former Captain of the Eclipse, Captain Rising, whose inability to pull together in the trying climate of that station resulted in the return of the latter to England by command of the Admiralty. We can easily imagine how amicably these two officers now discuss their differences in this cooler climate, and we have no doubt that when the gallant Captain referred to the gallant Admiral in his famous pamphlet as not being conspicuous for veracity, he only meant what he published in a Pickwickian sense. We are sure that no one now sees more clearly what a fatal mistake the issuing of that pamphlet was than the officer who wrote it. To bring charges of want of veracity against one's Commander-in-Chief, to say nothing of indulging in print in a somewhat caustic criticism of the Admiralty, was scarcely a wise proceeding on the part of one of the youngest captains in the service, who had been compulsorily relegated to half-pay, even though he had the interest of the whole House of Lords at his back. He had time on his side, and could well have afforded to wait till his disagreements with his Commander-in-Chief had blown over, when, as other officers similarly circumstanced have, he would have received another command. Instead of that it is now stated that he has been informed he need look for no further employment. The pamphlet —which, by the way, was sent to every Captain and Admiral on the Active List—was, we believe, hastily suppressed, on an intimation from Whitehall that only such a proceeding could avert from its author a further and more arbitrary step on the part of their Lordships. Nevertheless, the Admiralty are not free from blame. They treated Captain Rising like a child. They refused him an inquiry. It would be well to forgive and forget.

Captain Ward has succeeded Rear-Admiral Howard as Vice-President of the Ordnance Committee at the War Office. Captain Jenkings succeeds Captain Steward as a member of the Committee.

A correspondent calls our attention to the fact that the Prince of Wales, at the Royal Guards dinner, gave the health of the "Army, Navy, and Reserve Forces," which he seems to consider unusual; but somehow or another the practice of putting the Army before the Navy in toasts on public occasions has become well established, although, no doubt, the Navy is the senior service. Field-Marshal as the Prince of Wales is, there is no one in her Majesty's dominions who more honours the Navy, and has given greater proofs of his lively solicitude in all that pertains to its efficiency and welfare.

A safety shooting-shed, on the Morris principle, has been erected at Wellington Barracks, where recruits are being trained daily between the hours of 3 and 5 p.m., without the slightest danger to the public, and at a cost of one-fourth of the ordinary practice.

The 1st Battalion, 17th Leicestershire Regiment, at Aldershot, has been fitted with the new khaki clothing, and will take it into wear next week. This dress will be worn experimentally for six months, and then reported on. Very little can be said in its favour. It finds few admirers at Aldershot, and least of all among those who wear it, the 39th Dorsetshire Regiment having worn it for some time. When the great coat is worn, the epaulettes, or wings, which are made of a hard material, are greatly in the way, and hurt the shoulders much. These unsightly ornaments (?) should be at once discarded.

The band of the First Regiment of French Engineers, quartered at Versailles, one of the most famous on the Continent, arrived in London, as our readers know, on Sunday, and was escorted through the streets, at the close of a pelting shower of rain, by a body of police, which gave the visitors the appearance of being in custody; but, in reality, it was a friendly act, and our Gallic brethren very probably thought that the escort belonged to some distinguished military body. They were marched off through Pall Mall to Chelsea, and were lodged in the barracks in which are also lodged the band of the Magdeburg Cuirassiers. We hope that the most serious rivalry that may take place there will be to show which band plays best. The Génie band has been playing with immense success at the International Exhibition during the week.

We learn from Natal that General Smyth has decided to make Maritzburg the military head-quarters for South Africa, and that the whole of the Staff establishments will be moved there from Capetown. General Smyth, we understand, was most anxious to have the force under his command increased by two battalions; but unfortunately, there was a difficulty in finding so many men. The 82nd, now on passage, will, therefore, be the only reinforcement that will be sent to Natal at present.

The Armée Française of this week contains a very gloomy article on the sending home of the class of 1879, which will be released in the course of a few days. It says that the officers who are about to take part in the autumn manœuvres ask with anguish what their situations will be when they find themselves suddenly deprived of a third of their non-commissioned officers, and this at a moment when the Reservists are about to join. The Armée Française declares that it is enough to disgust one with the profession. An enormous amount of extra work will be thrown upon the shoulders of the regimental officers. If such is the lamentable state of affairs with the present period of active service, what will happen when that period is reduced to three years? The class now about to be liberated—the class of 1879—did not join until December, 1880, and it should not be liberated until June, 1885. When the three-years' service is finally adopted, it is confidently declared that the men, instead of serving three years, will not serve more than 18 months. However, economy is the order of the day, and there is a general cry in favour of democratising the Army so that it may harmonise with the other institutions of the country.

The Armeria Reale of Madrid, the destruction of which by fire was recorded in Thursday's papers, contained one of the most beautiful and valuable collection of armour and arms, as well as trophies, standards, in the world, and many objects of matchless interest from an historical point of view. Among the flags on the wall at the time of the Prince of Wales's visit in 1876 were some British regimental colours, taken, it is presumed, in South America. There is a tradition that the colours of the Guards, &c., who were forced to capitulate at the disastrous battle of Almanza were there up to the time of the entry of the British Army into Madrid under Wellington.

In another column will be found a statement signed "Field Officer," of a state of things which, we agree with the writer, must indeed be hard to bear. It seems, we must confess, very sharp practice, and we can only supposed that his Grace the Duke of Argyll never for a moment supposed that the exchange would go down so low as it now is,—1s. 7½d. As it has gone down thus, it only remains for the Secretary of State for India to cancel his obnoxious order, and allow all to draw their furlough pay at 2s. for the rupee, as it was so distinctly promised "in all future orders and references." It was doubly hard for those officers only to lose who did not come home between 1868-1871, for they were distinctly promised that the exchange should be at 2s. for the rupee for the future; and they were also told that they would be required to notify their intention to accept these rules on the first occasion of their taking leave after the publication of the order. We believe that many officers would have elected at once, but their attention was called to the wording of the above order. Living in India is much more expensive than it was when the new rates of pay were fixed in, we believe, 1863. Besides this, the low rate of exchange is very much against a residence in India, so that it is very hard that officers should be so unfairly taxed when they come home to recruit their health and enjoy their well-earned leave of absence. And only one part of the Indian officers to suffer—and this for no fault of their own—simply from not having taken leave between 1868 and 1871. It is, we confess, a very serious grievance, discreditable to the Indian Government and ours, that officers should not be allowed to suffer any longer.

In accordance with the universal law of supply and demand, there has been during recent years a great increase in the number of handbooks of military intruction. The growing importance of tactical knowledge and the crushing consequences of tactical ignorance are admitted more fully year by year by every European Power. The ever-advancing excellence of modern arms of precision, the swiftness of the telegraph's flash, detailing every movement and detecting every phase of modern warfare, together with the vastly increased mobility which the railway gives to modern armies, combine to entail on every officer —even the most subordinate—the necessity for a military knowledge of which his predecessors two generations since had no conception. The very private in the ranks must now possess a self-dependence and a power of initiative which his Captain 25 years ago hardly thought essential to his utility as a soldier. All these facts, and perhaps more especially the greatly enlarged interest in military education and acquirements, caused by the development of the Volunteer Force, have combined to produce a plentiful crop of books of instruction in field work. We regard this as an excellent sign of the times, and have great pleasure in testifying to the utility and practical nature of the latest of these brochures, an "Aid to Military Instruction," by Major Prevost, Sutherland and Argyll Highlanders. It includes in its scheme all the essential elements of field training. It is written in an easy and perspicuous style, and the arrangement of the matter is lucid and progressive. Every detail of importance is explained and illustrated by excellent and well-drawn plates and figures, some 150 in number, while a copious and well-arranged index and a marginal précis render reference to every paragraph easy and notes unnecessary. One portion of Major Prevost's plan is particularly noteworthy. His book is not only intended to teach, but to assist the officer in imparting instruction. Since the General Order of last year introduced the German system of training men under their own officers, many an excellent company commander has felt himself at a loss in his new rôle of Military Schoolmaster. The power of teaching is not innate in everyone. In some cases—in fact, in many—it is difficult to acquire; and in all, it is a frequent puzzle, "what to teach and how to teach it." To remedy this difficulty, Major Prevost has indicated by asterisks those portions of the work which refer especially to the non-commissioned officers and men. In simple words, their duties are explained in connection with almost every item of campaign routine, and the mere reading to a squad or company of the marked paragraphs will solve in many a case the problem of lecture-writing, which is anything but a universal art. We wish the book every success, and feel sure that it will prove extremely useful to those who wish to study, and very interesting even to the non-military reader who desires to have an intelligent appreciation of the life and duties of the soldier in the field.

THE NEW ERA.

[Scene.—Road near Clapham. Dramatis personæ.—JONES and BROWN, of the 1st Battalion, Scots-Coldstream-Grenadier Guards. A company of ditto. A halt.]

BROWN: What are we to do now?

JONES: I don't know. We are only half way through the four hours. Can you think of nothing?

BROWN: Well, let me see. I think if we were to do that new attack over again, reversing the companies in the first line.

JONES: We have done that already.

BROWN: So we have. It's awful bosh.

JONES: Yes, but it's not as bad as musketry.

BROWN: I don't know. Who is it that has ordered all this? I shall chuck up very soon.

JONES: So shall I.

BROWN: What a lucky thing it is we can chuck up.

JONES: I say, Brown, do you remember the Governor telling us how well it was that we were under the non-purchase system. When he was in the Army a fellow couldn't leave by sending in his papers off-hand. He had to make all his arrangements to save his money.

BROWN: Do you know, only for the confounded musketry and this new dodge of four hours' work for so many weeks, I would hold on until I was 40, and get my pension. But we must do something. Fall in, there!

[Resume the march towards the common, where for two hours more the men are exercised in doing what they have been hard at work at, and execrate, for the last three weeks].

THE PATRIOTIC FUND.

The Morning Post says:—"Our readers will be glad to learn that the arrangements alluded to in the House of Commons on the 19th ult. by the War Office Financial Secretary, for giving allowances to the widows and orphans of soldiers who loose their lives whilst on service, are now nearly completed. A fund, called the 'Soldiers' Effects Fund,' will shortly be transferred to the Royal Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund for administration. Those who have lost their husbands and fathers through the operations in Egypt will be the first recipients. Their claims will be considered as soon as practicable, and we learn that applications should be addressed to the secretary of the Patriotic Fund, 5 St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square, W.C. Such of the daughters of the deceased soldiers as are within the limits of age will be admitted to the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum on Wandsworth Common, which has its own endowment of £146,000, and consequently there will be no charge on the 'Soldiers' Effects Fund' for their maintenance and education. We are also able to furnish some particulars respecting the Patriotic Fund, the annual report of the Commissioners to her Majesty the Queen having been laid before Parliament. It appears that at the end of last year there remained 2,184 widows and remarried women in the receipt of allowances, and 164 children were also deriving benefit from it, irrespective of 256 girls in the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum. The sum of £35,000 has been set aside for the education of the orphans of Roman Catholic soldiers and sailors. The actuary of the Nationa Debt office, after making prudent provision to meet all the charges upon the Patriotic Fund, and assigning £6,000 as a reserve fund to meet unforeseen contingencies, estimated the liabilities on December 31, 1883, at £373,514, and the assets at £454,491, so that there was an estimated surplus of assets over liabilities of £80,977. The Rodriguez Fund amounted to £12,187. The Captain, the Eurydice, the Royal Naval Relief, the Zulu, and the Atlanta Funds are also administered by the Royal Commissioners. In connection with these separate funds there are 510 women and children remaining on the books. Two donations are mentioned in the report, one of £1,300 to the Patriotic Fund from Sir Constantine G. Zerondachi, K.C.M.G., a Greek merchant at Alexandria, who had shown great kindness and generosity to the sick and wounded of the forces in Egypt, the other of £500 to the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum from two officers, Major and Capt. Thurlow."

A Royal warrant, just issued, notifies the approval by the Queen of the establishment of the "Soldiers' Effects Fund." There is now in the hands of the Secretary of State for War a sum of about £44,500, undisposed residues to the credit of officers and soldiers who have died on service, and this and sums which may be accumulated in the future are to be devoted for the benefit of the widows and children or other near relatives of soldiers, preferential consideration being given to those widows and children of soldiers on the married establishment who met with their death by being killed in action; if not killed in action, by an injury directly traceable to military duty; or by illness directly traceable to fatigue, privation, or exposure in the performance of military duty within six months after their discharge on account of such illness.

Lady Brassey will this day present the prizes won during the year by the members of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers of the 1st London Corps, on board the Rainbow at 3.15 p.m., after which the boat-rowing competitions will take place. The corps have chartered the steamer Ich Dien, which will leave the Waterloo-Bridge pier at 5 p.m.

Service Questions in Parliament.

In reply to Col. Milne Holme, Mr. J. K. Cross stated in the House of Commons on Monday that those officers of the Indian Army who elected the new furlough rules of 1868 before July 1, 1871, when a change was made in the conditions of the rules, are permitted to continue under the benefits of the conditions in force when they elected. Those who elected the rules of 1868 after July 1, 1871—that is after the conditions were changed—abide by the rules in force when they elected. The election was optional to officers on taking furlough, and those doing so after July 1, 1871, had the option of continuing under the earlier rules of 1854, or of accepting the modified conditions of the rules of 1868. But he had not the option of electing a particular rule which had been formally abrogated. There is no intention of making any change in this respect.

In reply to Dr. Cameron, Lord Hartington gave an unqualified denial to the charges preferred against the Staffordshire Yeomanry on account of their conduct in previous years, and stated that there was no truth whatever in the reports which represent that "at a regimental dinner given by the officers of the Staffordshire Yeomanry at Lichfield last year, the Bishop, Dean, and one of the canons of Lichfield were pelted with oranges, and obliged to retire from the room under the escort of the colonel; and that at the Yeomanry ball, during the previous year's training, one of the officers introduced several women of the town, and that, in consequence, a number of respectable town and country gentry left the room."

Mr. J. K. Cross, in reply to Mr. Grant, said no communication had been received at the India Office from the Government of India from which it could be inferred that they contemplated making any increase in the Army in India.

Major Curzon asked the Secretary for War whether an officer who failed to pass his examination for promotion in January, 1884, would, if he passed the new simplfied examination, be allowed to resume his former position in his regiment above those junior to him who did pass the examination in January, 1884, and had been promoted over him. The Marquis of Hartington said it was better to defer a decision in such a case until it arose. There was only one regiment in which the case referred to could occur, but it was better to wait until it occurred, and not to decide on a hypothetical question.

On the House going into Committee of Supply, it was engaged until a late hour on the Army Estimates. On the vote for the Army Reserves, there was a long discussion on the condition of the Army and the general progress of recruiting, started by Sir W. Barttelot, who severely criticised the actual state of our Reserves and the capacity of the country to meet any possible military requirements. Major-General FitzWygram made an interesting and successful maiden speech. He said that the falling off in recruiting was mainly due to the dissatisfaction which Reserve men expressed with the result of the Service. He had always supported the short service system and the system of reserve; but he did not believe it would suit the cavalry. A reserve cavalryman, who had not been on horseback for four for five years, was unfit for immediate service. The Germans kept up their cavalry regiments to full war strength. He thought that every cavalry regiment should have at least five squadrons. Lord Hartington, in reply, went at length into the details of our military strength- We had at present of the Regular Army at home 84,957 non commissioned officers and men, as against an establishment of 86,750, first-class Army Reserve 37,493, Militia Reserve 28,482, second-class Army Reserve, 8,065, Militia 83,000, Volunteers 209,000, and Yeomanry 11,400. Altogether we had Reserves amounting to 65,975 available for foreign service, while the Second Army Reserve, together with Volunteers and Militia, gave us a force for home defence of 311,000 without counting the Regulars who would be left at home in the event of it being necessary to send an army corps abroad. He went into details as to the character and quality of the recruits now enlisted, and while contending that the Army was never more popular, urged that before increasing our estimates, the necessity of which he did not put out of sight, we ought to test our present organisation to the utmost. Col. Stanley pointed out that the increased number of recruits this year might be due to the depression in agriculture or trade; but after all the deficient numerical state of the Army might be due more to waste than to want of popularity in recruiting. He hoped that, as there were many men in the Service not altogether of the stamp that might be desired, and that, notwithstanding the efforts made, the War Department would not be lax in their exertions to meet defects, and would not hesitate to come forward and ask the House to sanction proposals for their remedy if they should be thought necessary.

The votes for the Reserves, Commissariat and Transport, provision and forage, the clothing establishments, warlike stores, expenditure on works and buildings, and military education were agreed to, after which, at 12.30, progress was reported.

In answer to Sir H. Maxwell, the Marquis of Hartington said, on Thursday, that as the Militia have only one dress, it was intended that they should remain in scarlet as at present.

An exciting incident occurred on board the Defence, guardship at Holyhead, but temporarily with the Reserve Squadron, when cruising off Heligoland. The Hercules went a short distance away for gun practice, and as she returned the signal "Prepare to anchor" was made. At that moment some commotion was caused in the Fleet by the fire bell of the Defence being vigorously rung. Fire was found amongst a quantity of cotton waste used for cleaning the engines in the engineer's store-room. It had been incautiously placed too close to the boilers. The pumps were manned with perfect coolness. In half an hour the fire was extinguished, but not before Samuel Dunn, leading stoker, had been badly burnt about the hands and arms. The damage done to the Defence was not serious.

THE FRENCH IN TONQUIN.

A French officer of distinction has delivered the following opinion on the subject of the Lang-Son affair. He first of all puts the question,—"Could the surprise of Lang-Son have been avoided? Certainly, it could have been, and it ought to have been, and the most elementary principles must have been neglected to allow of a French column falling into such a scrape. As soon as the General-in-Chief had been informed of the arrangement concluded with China, and the conditions relative to the evacuation of certain towns, his first duty should have been to write to the commander of the enemy's army, stating the terms of the convention, congratulating him on the cessation of hostilities, and inviting him to enter into relations with him, in order to arrange the details indicated by the treaty. It must not be said that the enemy had no commander, for one was found at the opening of hostilities to whom a sort of ultimatum was addressed. . . . . . Once the despatch forwarded, an answer would, or would not, have been received. In the first case, if a favourable reply had been sent in, negotiations would have been opened. It is to be supposed that General Millot, with his African, and Colonel Gurrier, the chief of his Staff, with his Chinese experience, would have arranged all details with prudence. Thus, dates would have been agreed upon, guides would have been furnished, the notabilities would have been invited to come out and meet the troops. Under these circumstances, if there had been any resistance on the part of the Chinese, their responsibility would have been undoubted, and have admitted of no excuse. If there had been a refusal to execute the treaty, General Millot would have been warned, and have been able to take the necessary steps. But if the enemy had not answered, or had sent an unfavourable reply, what ought to have been done? Should not the telegraph have been employed, and the matter reported to the Government at home, to enable it to settle matters with the Chinese Government? The French Government would have given orders to resort to force in the event of not receiving satisfactory explanations, and we should have beaten the enemy at Lang-Son as elsewhere. . . . . . . A convention signed with China imposed upon us the obligation of not employing force until forms had been exhausted, nor should it have inspired a blind confidence." The writer then blames General Millot for not having been more cautious, especially as his forces, if sufficient for an occupation, were not sufficient for a conquest. He adds,—"They presented themselves. The enemy turned out, said they had received no orders, resisted, and attacked our troops, who, but for their bravery, would have succumbed." This appears to us to be putting the matter very fairly, but we have yet to learn the exact instructions sent to General Millot from the Quai d'Orsay. It will probably turn out that he was ordered to do more than he had the power of doing, and that if he sent a weak column to take possession of Lang-Son, it was because he could not send a strong one. Another writer makes some pertinent observations on this subject. He points out that in October last M. Jules Ferry limited French conquest in Tonquin to Hong Hoa to the west, and Bacninh to the north; that six months later a treaty gave France more than this, and that the Chinese troops, regular and irregular, fell back behind Song Thuong. "If M. Jules Ferry," adds the writer, "had not exceeded the limits fixed by Parliament, the lamentable check of Lang-Son would not have occurred;" and he holds M. Jules Ferrry responsible "for suddenly ordering operations to be extended beyond the limits primitively fixed, and by which the force of the contingent had been determined. . . . . . One can understand, therefore, how it came that General Millot sent too weak a column against Lang-Son,—a column which was attacked and forced to recede. The negotiations opened between the chiefs of the hostile forces having led to no result, the Chinese refusing to evacuate the place for want of orders, and our troops being determined to seize upon it, an engagement ensued. The fight was too unequal to last long. At noon the retreat was sounded, and our baggage fell into the hands of the enemy." Our neighbours, as far as the Press is concerned, are evidently inclined to throw more blame on their own people than on the Chinese. It is said that General Millot has asked for reinforcements, and that 3,000 men will be dispatched to Tonquin as soon as possible. These men will be required even in the event of matters being settled between France and China, as the expeditionary force has suffered considerable losses.

COMPOUND-ARMOUR PLATES.

The Danish Government, following the example set by England, France, Italy, and other maritime Powers, has decided in favour of the adoption of English compound-armour plates, as superior to all others for the protection of ships against modern rifled ordnance. This was only to be expected. It would, indeed, have been surprising to find a Government such as that of Denmark arriving at any other conclusion, after the experience gained at the trials which have been made throughout the world of iron, steel, and compound-armour plates. The latter have invariably proved superior to all other means of protecting a ship's side, and, although it was at one time thought that the influence in Copenhagen of the French Creuzot works was powerful enough to influence the Danish Government to use solid steel plates to protect their ships, the final decision arrived at last week, shows that the Danes are determined to use the very best material they can procure, irrespective of its nationality. It will be remembered that at the last trials on the island of Amager, near Copenhagen, both the Ellis and the Wilson systems of facing iron plates with steel were tried. The Danes have now decided to adopt the latter system, as being, in their opinion, superior to the former. It has come to be admitted by all Naval Powers that compound-armour is far better able to withstand the heavy blow of the projectile thrown by modern ordnance than are either solid steel or iron plates; and, since steel-faced plates are solely made in Sheffield, this English industry will be busy for many years to come. Russia, however, is alive to the advantages of producing at home all the material required for its Navy; and Messrs. Cammell and Co. have recently received an order from the Russian Government to forthwith set up works within its frontiers for the manufacture of Wilson's compound-armour plates. The armour for the French ships Duguesclin, Vauban, Requin, Caïman, Admiral Baudin, Duperé, Furieux, and Tonnerre, is being made in France on the Wilson system. That of the Indomptable was manufactured in Sheffield by Messrs. Cammell and Co., as were also the plates for the Russian Vladimir Monomach, the Chinese Chen-Yuen, the Brazilian Riachuelo, the Italian Italia, and many other modern ships of foreign Governments. Our Admiralty use both Wilson and Ellis compound-plates, it not being deemed expedient, where so many ships are constantly in course of construction, for the Government to be solely dependent on one firm.

ASSISTANT-CONSTRUCTORS.

A correspondent, quoting Sir T. Brassey's remarks in reply to Mr. A. Egerton, that—

"in recommending the appointment of ten 1st-class Assistant-Constructors in her Majesty's Dockyards, the Committee contemplated that some of the designing work now done at the Admiralty should be transferred to the yards, but that the change could not yet be carried out;"

also,—

"that those Admiralty draughtsmen who were made 1st-class Assistants held posts requiring the highest scientific attainments, which had hitherto been inadequately recognised. This argument does not apply with equal force to the foremen of the yard, highly as we value their services. Hence they have been appointed in the first instance as 2nd-class, with prospects of promotion without the ordeal of examination;"— says:—

"The scheme provided for 1st-class assistant-constructors doing the duty of foreman of the yard, and as the 2nd-class assistant-constructors selected at the yard are already doing that work, there can be no valid excuse for not at once appointing them, seeing that the maximum salary of the 1st-class is the same as that they were previously entitled to as foremen of the yard; the truth apparently being the late Admiralty draughtsmen, who were all made 1st-class assistants, and also at the same time made eligible for dockyard promotion, can see the great advantage of being placed one step in advance of the dockyard staff. The foremen complain, while previously alone eligible for promotion, they have been placed one step further removed from constructor, while manifestly the opinions of the dockyard officers are that these late Admiralty draughtsmen have not had the experience which would justify their appointment to the post of constructor for actual superintendence of building and repairs of ships, to control and arrange the work of some thousands of men. Their fitness as designers is not at all the question; it is really,—Can they manage men, prepare detailed estimates of work, and fulfil the numerous practical duties required? Without doubt, if promoted, they must be entirely dependent on the aid of the men that would be so unjustly treated. As regards the second part of the answer, their posts do require high scientific attainments; but it is not certain they all possess it, for the senior of them have not received scientific training at Kensington or Greenwich like the younger of them, neither have they passed any competitive or qualifying examination for their posts. On the other hand, the whole of the foremen of the yard won their positions by keenly-contested examinations, while only one competition has been ever permitted for Admiralty draughtsmen. The greater portion of the selected foremen of the yard, who were made 2nd-class assistant-constructors on account of their superior scientific attainments, were educated at School of Naval Architecture, at Kensington or Greenwich. Now, these dockyard officers are directly responsible for works on ships in the course of a year costing more than two millions sterling. It is surely to the advantage of the public service that their zeal should not be extinguished as their prospects of promotion are threatened to be, for putting it very mildly indeed, many thousands would be wasted in a very short time by very little decrease of their vigilant supervision. Perhaps it is hardly needed to add that the late Admiralty draughtsmen have under the scheme received a substantial increase of salary."

As the Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves has observed that in some instances the stokers serving in the Coastguard force on shore have not been embarked on board the First Reserve ships for the yearly cruise in their regular turn, he has directed that they are in future to be placed in sections, so as to ensure their embarking for the cruise every alternate year.

Com. Tynte Hammill, of the Monarch, has returned to that vessel on the completion of his special mission in Upper Egypt.

FURLOUGH PAY, INDIAN SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I am sure it can never have been properly represented to the authorities in this country that a number of the officers of the Indian service are drawing less furlough pay by some 20 per cent. than their more fortunate brethren who elected for the 1868 Rules, between that year and 1871, and who are paid at 2s. for the rupee; and this for no fault of their own, as the following will show. On June 19, 1868, "The Furlough Rules of 1868" were published, in which it was stated "that officers will be required generally to notify their intention to accept these rules, or to adhere to those now existing, on the first occasion of their taking leave after the publication of this order." In General Order No. 1,064, of 1868, is stated:—"In all future orders and references furlough pay will be understood as the half Indian salary converted at the exchange of 2s. for the rupee." In 1871, his Grace of Argyll, while allowing the above to have been ruled, goes on to write, "As the rate of exchange has not varied since 1860-61, until the present financial year, for which it has been fixed at 1s. 11d., it is only on the question at what rate furlough pay for the current quarter should be issued that my attention has been specially drawn to the point, although the order was sanctioned in my despatch, dated March 31, 1869, No. 93. On a careful consideration of the matter, it appears to me that there is no reason why the pay of officers in this country should be issued at a different rate from that at which those in India are allowed to remit a portion of their salary to England. I have accordingly to request that your Lordships will at once issue an order cancelling so much of that of Nov. 10, 1868, No. 1,064, as fixed the uniform rate of 2s. and announcing that all payments of furlough pay will be made at the current rate of exchange fixed for the official year." On the above despatch being received, it was ruled that officers only who took furlough and general leave, and therefore elected the rules of 1868 prior to July 1, 1871, would receive their pay at the exchange of 2s. the rupee, the pay of those who had not taken leave, and had therefore not elected to be governed by rates of exchange. With reference to the above, I would point out the following facts:—1. That officers were called on to notify their intention of accepting these rules on the first occasion of taking furlough, so that those who happened to take furlough or leave on medical certificate (and even those who overstayed their leave, and were virtually absent without leave, and had to apply for a few days' general leave, in addition to the usual privilege leave, to enable them to rejoin) prior to the publication of G. O. No. 588, of 1871, reap the benefits from which those officers who did not happen to take any leave at that time are debarred; and therefore, in many cases, those who have had the greater amount of leave draw increased pay when on furlough. 2. That in G. O. No. 1,064, it is distinctly laid down that in all future orders and references, as regards furlough pay, exchange would be at 2s. the rupee. I question whether it is a good plan to refuse to carry out a promise when once made. 3. That it is a curious distinction to make, that one body of officers should be drawing less furlough pay by some 20 per cent. than others, both being of the same service, in many cases, from the fact of the former having stayed longer on duty in India than the latter. 4. That the remark of his Grace of Argyll, that his Grace "sees no reason why the pay of officers in this country should be issued at a different rate from that at which those in India are allowed to remit a portion of their salary to England," has nothing to do with the subject (though, oddly enough, his Grace, by his despatch, has instituted two rates of pay when on furlough for the same body of officers); for surely it is bad enough for officers to lose on remittance to the tune of some 20 per cent., the same on payment for all articles which are required from England, without having their furlough-pay reduced by some 20 per cent., when it was distinctly promised at 2s. for the rupee, and this latter reduction to affect only that portion of the officers of the Indian service who remained at their posts on duty from 1868 to 1871. I hope, Mr. Editor, you will kindly help us to bring forward this grievance, which is, indeed, a hard one to bear.—I am, &c.,

Field Officer.

The Camp at Wimbledon opens to-day, and the competitions will begin, in due course, on Monday. The Executive Committee will consist of Col. Sir H. Wilmot, Bart., C.B., V.C. (Chairman of the Council of the N.R.A.); Col. Sir H. Fletcher, Bart.; Lieut.-Col. Walrond, Lieut.-Col. Marsden, and Major Waller. The "Executive Officer" will again be Major Humphry; the Statistical Officers, Majors Hollway and Archdale. Major Tynte, 4th Dragoon Guards, will have charge of the ranges, assisted by Lieut.-Col. Morris, 21st Middlesex R.V. Mr. Rooke will superintend the Accountant's Office; and Capt. Mildmay will be at his post for the 25th time as the Secretary of the Association. The posts of Camp Comdt. and Camp Adjt., vacated by the lamented death of Col. Manningham Buller and the retirement from the service of Major Urquhart, will be filled by Lieut.-Col. H. Eaton, Grenadier Guards, and Major Colebrooke Carter, Adjt. of the 1st V.B. Berkshire Regt. Capt. the Hon. C. R. Colville, Grenadier Guards, is also a Camp Adjt. Major Rochford-Boyd, R.E., is the Commanding Royal Engineer, with Capt. Goold-Adams, 74th Highlanders, as his assistant. The hospital will be again under the charge of Brig.-Surg. Elkington, Grenadier Guards; Staff Surg. Hamilton, A.M.D.; and Surg. Pocklington, 3rd Surrey R.V. Considerable uneasiness is felt as to the working of the regulation made by the National Rifle Association disqualifying officers and men of Volunteer corps who are beyond the respective maxima ages for their ranks. It is thought that all who are passed as efficients in their corps should be accepted, without further question, as competitors.

At the quarterly meeting of the Directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, held on the 8th inst., Sir W. Stuart in the chair, £70 was distributed among the several applicants.

The Army.

Mr. Mordaunt Fenwick-Bisset, late M.P. for West Somerset, of Bagborough, Somerset, and of Lessendrum, Aberdeenshire, died on Sunday, at his residence, Bagborough House. The deceased was the only son of the late Ven. Maurice George Fenwick-Bisset, sometime Archdeacon of Raphoe. He was born in 1825, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and formerly held a commission in the King's Dragoon Guards.

The Times states that, "Major F. C. H. Clarke, now Professor of Military Administration and Law at the Staff College, has been appointed Surveyor-General of Ceylon, and will be succeeded at Sandhurst by Major Rothwell, from the Intelligence Department."

Bombadier W. S. Treadwell, Gunners J. Phipps and J. Adair, have been granted the medal for distinguished service in the field, in recognition of their services in the Soudan.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Gen. J. R. Becher, C.B., Col.-Comdt. (late Bengal), died at Southampton on the 9th inst. The deceased served in the campaign of 1842 in Afghanistan, including the forcing of the Khyber Pass (medal), Sutlej campaign of 1846, severely wounded at Sobraon (medal, and brevet of major), and was mentioned in despatches for services in operations against the mutineers on the Hazara frontier, and in operations on the Eusofzia frontier, in 1857 (medal with clasp, and Civil C.B.). He joined the Army, March 6, 1838; became major-gen., March 6, 1868; lieut.-gen., Oct. 7, 1876; gen., Nov. 29, 1878; and col.-comdt., Sept. 15, 1881.

The Governments of Madras and Bombay have recently brought to the notice of the Supreme Government the great paucity of officers of Royal Engineers in these Presidencies, while a disproportionately large number exist in Bengal. The disproportion arose through all the Royal Engineer officers sent out in 1881-82 and 1882-83 having erroneously been posted to Bengal. It has accordingly been resolved to transfer two captains and subalterns from Bengal to each of the other two Presidencies. The officers likely to be thus transferred are Capts. Goldie, Watkins, Heathcote, and Cotter, Lieuts. Morton, Newman, and Ellis. This will relieve the pressure felt in Madras and Bombay. But the actual total establishment of Royal Engineers in India is considerably below the sanctioned strength of nine battalions. It is, however, understood that the general question is under the consideration of a committee at home.

A general order from the War Office notifies that the following changes will come into effect on Oct. 1:—The 4th, 27th, 28th, and 33rd (Submarine Mining) Companies will be converted into six companies, as under:—1st Section, 4th Compy., now at Bermuda, and 3rd Section, 4th Compy., at Halifax, to be 4th Compy.; 1st and 3rd Sections, 27th Compy., at Chatham, to be 27th Compy.; 1st and 2nd Sections, 28th Compy., at Portsmouth, to be 28th Compy.; 1st and 2nd Sections, 33rd Compy., at Malta, to be 33rd Compy.; 2nd Section, 4th Compy., at Bermuda, and 3rd Section, 33rd Compy., at Harwich, to be 22nd Compy.; and 2nd Section, 27th Compy. and 3rd Section, 28th Compy., at Cork, to be 34th Compy.

Grenadier Guards. The 2nd Batn. from London—25 officers, 649 non-commissioned officers and men—will leave Waterloo, at 8.45 a.m., on the 15th inst., for Farnborough, and thence march to the North Camp for a course of military training and musketry. This battalion will be attached to the 3rd Brig. The 3rd Batn. from London—about 26 officers, 671 non-commissioned officers and men—will leave Waterloo, at 9.15 a.m., on the 15th inst., for Broadwood, and thence march to Pirbright, there to be encamped for a course of military training and musketry.

Scots Guards. The 1st Batn.—about 23 officers, 564 non-commissioned officers and men—will proceed on the 15th inst., at 10.15 a.m., from Farnborough to Nine Elms, and thence march to Chelsea Barracks on completion of a course of musketry and military training at Aldershot.

2nd Queen's Own (Royal West Surrey Regiment). Major Trench, D.A.Q.M.G., Lahore, comes home on three months' leave.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Col. Hon. H. Parnell, half-pay, late of the regiment, has been appointed to command the 15th Regtl. District at Beverley.

4th King's Own, Royal Lancaster Regiment. Lieut. Hunt, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Extra A.D.C. to the Governor of Bombay.

8th King's Liverpool Regiment. The 1st Batn. is under orders to move from Cork to the Curragh.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. Major Bruce, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Adjt. of the 2nd Volunteer Batn. at Scarborough.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. The 2nd Batn. moves from Mhow, &c., to Nusseerabad and Neemuch next winter.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. The Standard announces the appointment of Col. Gildea as member of the Army Dress and Equipment Committee.

22nd Regiment. The late Capt. Thomas Molyneux was appointed ensign, 22nd Foot, Sept. 12, 1865, and obtained his company on July 24, 1878. He volunteered for active service in January last, was ordered to proceed to Egypt to serve in the Egyptian Army, and left this country on Feb. 16. On arrival in Egypt he was employed in the Egyptian War Office, and in April was sent up the Nile to act as Staff officer to Col. F. Duncan, R.A., at Assouan. He proceeded to Korosko in the middle of May, where apparently he contracted dysentery. After three weeks' illness he died at the Citadel Hospital, Cairo, at midnight on July 4.

25th King's Own Borderers. The 2nd Batn. moves from Kinsale to Dublin.

29th Worcestershire Regiment moves next winter from Nusseerabad to Kurrachee and Hyderabad.

32nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry is under orders to move from Cork to Dublin.

35th Regiment. The special correspondent of the Daily News writes:—"Assouan, Monday.—The 35th Regt., 600 strong, arrived this afternoon, under the command of Major Tolson. The men will march to camp outside the town tomorrow. They seem in good condition. The arrival of the regiment has produced a marked effect upon the natives, but it will wear off when they find how few are the men. An English brigade should be sent here, and the Egyptian troops be withdrawn." Private J. Cleft has been awarded the medal for distinguished service in the field, in recognition of his service lately in the Soudan. A telegram from Egypt says the regiment is en route to Assouan. Major Kelly has proceeded to Suakim as brigade-major to Gen. Freemantle.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Serjt. Sutherland, Hospital Serjt. Davidson, Pte. Shines, and Drummer Mumford have been awarded distinguished-conduct medals and gratuities of £5, in recognition of their gallantry in the Soudan.

46th (Duke of Cornwall's) Light Infantry. A telegram from Egypt states that the regt. has arrived at Keneh.

47th North Lancashire Regiment moves next winter from Ahmednuggur to Poona and Quetta.

48th Northamptonshire Regiment. The Standard says:—"The Government contemplate reducing the military forces now in Ireland by the withdrawal of three regiments of the Line and one regiment of cavalry. The first to move will be the 48th (Northamptonshire) Foot, who will probably be quartered at Parkhurst."

ROYAL MARINES.

The Deputy-Adjutant-General has notified that in the event of any non-commissioned officer or man on the married roll of the Divisions, and in receipt of lodging-allowance, being sentenced to imprisonment, such lodging-allowance may be continued to be issued for his family during the period he is undergoing imprisonment if the sentence is under six months and provided quarters are not available.

55th Border Regiment is under orders to move from Newry to Dublin.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. On the occasion of the celebration of the sixth anniversary of the opening of the Castle Art Museum, at Nottingham, on the 3rd inst., the memorial erected by the officers and men of the regiment was formally unveiled. The band of the 59th assembled in the Great Market Place. Without playing, they proceeded to the Castle Grounds, where there was a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen. The members of the Corporation, magistrates, officers of the Robin Hood Rifles, and others were received in the "long room" by the Mayor and Sheriff in their official robes. The officers who attended were Lieut.-Cols. Lawson (in command of the regiment), Frampton, and Sartorius, V.C.; Capts. Downes, Battye, and Leonard; Lieuts. Goff, Pile, and Hale; and Qrmr. Guest. Col. Lawson, addressing the Mayor, said that the 59th Regt. had been originally raised in Nottingham by Gen. Montague in 1755. That regiment was called the 2nd Nottinghamshire, which name it had continued to hold until July, 1881. He would not detain them with any account of the history of the 59th; but, as they were aware, it had been engaged in the late Afghan war, in the campaigns of 1878-79-80. When Regulars went out to battle, there were, of course, losses to be expected; but their greatest enemies, frequently, were disease and sickness, as cholera. As the members of the 59th had lost many comrades in Afghanistan, they had wished to erect a monument to their memory. With the kind permission of the authorities in Nottingham they had been allowed to erect it in Nottingham, as being the most proper place for it, and that site had been obtained. For himself, he had belonged to the regiment for 30 years—almost from a boy, until now. He would say, too, that he had always been brought up in the idea that Nottingham was their town. At all times they had a great respect for it, and as they had been allowed already to present the town with a bell and with colours, he need not say how sorry they were when the military authorities thought right to sever them from their old connection. The monument had been erected by the 59th to their comrades who had gone, and he had to thank Mr. Jackson, the sculptor, for all his efforts, and for the way in which the work had been executed. In the name of his brother-officers and himself, he presented the memorial to the town of Nottingham. With these concluding words Col. Lawson immediately unveiled the memorial. The band performed the Dead March in "Saul," which was at once followed by the playing of the National Anthem. The Mayor, addressing Col. Lawson and the officers present, said it was with great pleasure that their attendance was hailed upon that most interesting occasion. The ceremony of unveiling such a memorial must necessarily have a good deal of significance, taking place as it did in the town after which the battalion was named originally. That monument, bearing the names probably of many Nottinghamshire men who had died in action or from wounds or disease, and who had bravely acquitted themselves, they would hold in sacred trust. For that monument they were grateful, and he hoped that they would always regard it as it deserved to be regarded. This was the whole of the ceremony. The obelisk, upon which the names of deceased members of the battalion are inscribed on three sides, bears upon the fourth side the following:—"In memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers of her Majesty's 59th Regt., who fell in action or died of wounds or disease during the Afghan Campaigns of 1878-79-80." Underneath are the words, "Erected by their comrades." A luncheon was afterwards given by the Mayor, in the Exchange Hall, to the officers, the Corporation, magistrates, and others.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 1st Batn. is under orders to move from Dublin to Limerick. Col. Sir C. Ashburnham, 3rd Batn., has been appointed to the command of the garrison at Alexandria, vice Major-Gen. Earle, on special leave to England. Gen. Grenfell, attached to Egyptian army, left Cairo on Tuesday for Assouan. Major Wilford, formerly of the regt., died at Tunbridge Wells on the 2nd inst., aged 78 years.

61st Gloucester Regiment moves in the winter from Kurrachee to Ahmednuggur and Poona.

75th Gordon Highlanders. Private D. McPherson has been granted the medal for distinguished service in the field, in recognition of his gallantry in the Soudan.

77th Middlesex Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Gatacre succeeds to the command, vice Col. Colquhoun, retired on half-pay.

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. A correspondent writes from Natal:—"Lieut.-Col. Forbes-Robertson joined (on promotion from the 2nd Batn.) at Pietermaritzburg, Natal, on April 18. On the 28th the band and pipers gave a promenade concert at the new Market Hall, which was very well attended. The proceeds were handed over to local charities. On May 3 the Lorne Athletic Club of the regiment gave an assault-at-arms at the Theatre Royal. The performance was good, and drew a very crowded house. The whole regiment is now again in Zululand, although some companies have been there since the arrival of the regiment in Natal in December, when one company, under Lieut. Paterson, joined the force at Fort Curtis, Ekowe. This was quickly followed by a reinforcement under Capt. Robbins and Lieut. Cavendish. On April 8, Major Mills left Pietermaritzburg with two more companies, one being the mounted company, under Lieut. Richardson. On May 13, two more companies, under Major Chater, left, and arrived at Ekowe on the 21st, when, owing to the uncertain aspect of affairs, the head-quarters left at Pietermaritzburg were suddenly ordered up, and marched into Ekowe, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Rapley, on May 30, the band playing 'Here we are again,' in remembrance that a little more than five years ago they took part in the relief of the garrison at Ekowe, after the fight at Ginginghlova. The men whose service is up, and who were to have left for home, have been detained for the present. Just before the arrival of the head-quarters—viz., on May 23—a party of 100 men, under Major Chater, left Ekowe for the Entumene Heights, some fourteen miles on in the direction of the Inkandhla Forest, where a fort was constructed. These were shortly reinforced by another 100 men, under Lieut. Middlemass. The fort was quickly constructed under direction of Lieut. Yolland, R.E. It has been officially called 'Fort Chater.' Large quantities of stores have been sent up, in view of any subsequent operations proving necessary. A force of 300 loyal natives is encamped near the fort, and these are constantly on the alert against an attack from the Usutus, who are close by, the scouts of the rival parties frequently exchanging shots. The health of the regiment so far is exceptionally good, and the men in capital spirits, but anxious that whatever is to be done may be done quickly." Capt. C. G. Alison, late of the regiment, has been elected Chief Constable of Somersetshire. From April, 1879, to August, 1880, he was chief constable of Wigan, and since August, 1880, he has been assistant and deputy chief constable of Lancashire.

92nd Gordon Highlanders. H.M.S. Assistance arrived in Plymouth Sound on the 3rd inst., from Greenock, with the regiment on board. Headed by the bands of the Royal Marines and Highland Light Infantry they marched through the town to the Raglan Barracks, where they took up the quarters vacated by the 82nd Lancashire Regt., which left Devonport last week for service in South Africa.

98TH NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE REGIMENT leaves Quetta next winter for Mhow, Indore, and Asisgarh. The Calcutta Englishman says:—"Early on June 4, on the height of Quetta fort, in a place which could be seen from afar, there was hanged Yar Dad, the murderer of Lieut. Dupuis. The 98th Regt., which happened to be on the parade-ground, thus witnessed the execution of the assassin of their officer. The trial had been swift and searching; the sentence was speedily carried out. The criminal, who had been brought into Quetta only a few days before, was led out attended by eight prisoners in chains. The prisoners pulled the fatal plank, and after the surgeon had certified death the body was burnt. The inquiry, which was conducted in the Han Pass, near the scene of the crime, has borne out the original reports. On Sunday morning Yar Dad and two boys, all inhabitants of the village of Yurok, were working in a field, when, at a distance, they saw an Englishman walking up the hill. Attracted by the love of plunder, or, perhaps, simply goaded by the lust of blood, they tracked Mr. Dupuis for five miles, to a place where the narrow ledge of rock runs out a deep nullah, which is bridged over by a plank. There the Yasnazai Pathans set upon the British officer. They pushed him into the nullah, a drop of about 20 feet. Though he tried to defend himself, and fired two shots from his revolver, he was half-stunned by the fall. He missed his assailants and speedily succumbed under the rocks hurled at his head. The body remained for days in the icy water which preserved it from decay, hidden under boulders; and when the searching party of English and Sikh soldiers had returned, as it seemed, from a hopeless task, the murderers at night removed the body and interred it some distance off up the hills. The whole of the Han valley, and especially the guilty inhabitants of Yurok, have been summarily punished by a fine of 10,000 rs. and the loss of the fourth part of their corps."

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. A medical officer writes:—"In your issue of the 5th inst., it is stated that medical officers are being blackballed in certain service clubs. Many years before unification was dreamt of, a like line of conduct was pursued in one of the clubs, until it was firmly and promptly stopped (by the medical officers already members), for at the next large ballot, every candidate without exception was blackballed. Let the individuals now guilty of similar invidious conduct reflect that the remedy is still available, and that all discredit and unpleasantness will be due to them. You would, I am, sure, be sorry for such to occur, and therefore I have no doubt you will insert this."

PAY DEPARTMENT. During the past month the following changes of station, promotions, retirements, and appointments have taken place in the Pay Department:—Chief Pymrs. and Lieut.-Cols. Streatfield, from Dover to Malta; Morris, Cape to Dover; Murray, China to England; Farwell, to York. Staff Pymrs. and Majors Samwell, to R.A., Devonport; Greenwood, 65th Regimental District, Pontefract, to R.A., Colchester; Craig, to R.A., Dover; Anson, to 45th Regimental District, Derby; Treffry, 16th Regimental District, Bradford, to 102nd Regimental District, Naas; Rose, 102nd Regimental District, Naas, to 16th Regimental District, Bedford. Pymrs. and Majors Gahan, 101st Regt., to 65th Regimental District, Pontefract; Turner, to 67th Regt.; Booth, 46th Regt., to Unattached List; Woodall, York to Egypt; Aked, 19th Hussars, to 2nd Dragoon Guards. Pymrs. and Capts. Webster to Unattached List; Lloyd, to 1-19th Regt.; Wynne, to Unattached List; Sawyer, to 46th Regt.; Taaffe, to 2-13th L.I. Promotions.—To be Staff Paymasters—R. McI. Nott, F. N. I. Taylor, and J. H. Jackson. To have the honorary rank of Major—Capts. Stokes, Shields, Bromfield, Orange, and Dowdall. To be Paymaster and Hon. Captain—Assist.-Pymr. Beardmore. Retirements.—Majors Wray and Thompson. Appointment.—Lieut. Broughton, from the 54th Regt., to be pymr. and hon. capt. Last Monday, in the House of Commons, in reply to Mr. A. O'Connor, Sir A. Hayter said, "As a matter of fact, staff paymasters have held the hon. rank of major since the formation of the Army Pay Department in 1878. Perhaps I may be allowed to add that, by the courtesy of the honourable and gallant baronet, the Member for West Sussex, my attention was privately called to a very slight error on this subject in my reply of the 12th ult. to the hon. Member for Liverpool, when I said that the rank of major had recently been conferred on staff paymasters? I should have said that the rank was conferred on the formation of the Department in 1878. But as there is not now, and never has been, any intention of conferring the hon. rank of lieutenant-colonel on staff paymasters, and as the date on which the rank of major had been first assigned to them was not material to the understanding of my reply, it seems to me unnecessary to take up the time of the House by an explanation of what appears to me so trifling a mistake."

MILITIA.

EASTERN DIVISION, ROYAL ARTILLERY. A correspondent writes:—"The 3rd Brig. was inspected on the 3rd inst., at Dovercourt, by Col. Wortham, R.A., who complimented the men on their good conduct, the proficiency they had shown at their various drills, and their steadiness on parade. Taking train on Saturday, the brigade reached its headquarters, the depôt, Ipswich, at 1 o'clock, where Lord Waveney—for many years colonel commandant—was waiting to receive his old comrades and say a few words to the men before they were dismissed to their homes. 'When you come up next year,' said Col. Whitbread, after Lord Waveney had concluded, 'bring your brothers and comrades with you.' 'Explain to your friends the advantages of enlisting,' said an inspecting officer some years ago,—at which grim pleasantry a smile was seen to flit along the ranks. 'Why, certainly.' Those advantages consist in sleeping in a grass field for a month, generally in atrocious weather,—this year was an exception,—in catching occasionally acute attacks of rheumatism, in shaking dozens of earwigs, three or four times per diem, out of your forage-caps, brushes, boots, and beds, varied now and again by a couple of hours' pack-drill when you don't turn out well, which you can't do in wet weather. The labourers of Suffolk are not all men of ability, but they do know when they're comfortable and when they're not, and they fail to appreciate all those advantages. The regiment is simply dwindling away, and the same thing may be said with truth of other regiments that have met with similar treatment. Many men enlist to get a uniform. With pardonable pride (a soldier is nothing without a little swagger) they like to show themselves in it to their friends—perchance to their sweethearts—and to show yourself for twelve or fourteen consecutive years to the 'master gunner' and the butcher who brings the rations in the morning is scarcely 'good enough,' and apt at last to turn monotonous. For all these long years (except in 1878, passed at Grain Fort, that was a change indeed!) has this long-suffering and well-conducted body of men led this miserable and canvas-backed existence, when they might have been in comfortable barracks at Ipswich. 'If you go to Ipswich, you'll have far more crime.' Well and good. The officers will then master their duties on courts-martial,—duties with which they are at present totally unacquainted, similarly to the bugler who couldn't sound the 'retreat' when requested to do so by a foreign potentate. Any change—Norfolk Island or New Caledonia, or even another turn at Fort Grain, although that sweet spot is scarcely on a par with Peebles for pleasure—would be hailed with gratitude by officers and men alike."

ROYAL FUSILIERS. On the occasion of the presentation of new colours to the 5th Batn., at Aldershot, on the 3rd inst., Lady Alison addressed them as follows:—"Col. Edgcombe, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 5th Batn. of the Royal Fusiliers,—I wish some one more personally worthy than myself had been here to-day to present your new colours, but I thank you very much for the honour you have done me, which, as the wife of a soldier and of the General under whose command you now are, I appreciate very highly. In presenting these new colours, I must congratulate you on being now associated with the old historical 7th Fusiliers, that 'astonishing infantry,' who, at Albuhera, by English courage, and for duty's sake, defied death and gained the day for their country, and who later on, in our own times, showed the same characteristics, and, under Lacy Yea, climbed the bank at the Alma, and drove back the Russian column behind it. Should the opportunity occur, at home or abroad, I doubt not that, whether as individuals or as a battalion, you will uphold the honour of the City of London, and prove yourselves worthy of your territorial regiment."

EAST SURREY REGIMENT. The 4th Batn. (3rd Royal Surrey) will leave Kingston, at 4.30 p.m., on the 14th inst., for conveyance to Aldershot for the annual training. This battalion will be attached to the 1st Brigade.

WELSH REGIMENT. The 3rd Batn., now training at Wrexham, was presented with new colours, the presentation being made by Mrs. Cornwallis West on Wednesday.

ROYAL WARWICKSHIRE REGIMENT. The 3rd Batn., Col. Grimston in command, completed its annual training on Saturday last. The battalion paraded in the old Militia Barracks at 8 a.m., and marched from Warwick to Bushbrook Barracks, a distance of two-and-a-half miles, where the arms and clothing were given into store, and the men paid-off, every man being out of barracks by 3 p.m.,—the smartness with which this was done reflecting credit on both officers and non-commissioned officers. The conduct of the men during their sojourn in the town of Warwick has been exemplary. The inspection was carried out by Col. Fielden, commanding the Regimental District, who expressed himself thoroughly satisfied with the appearance of the battalion, both in review and marching-order. The officers present with the battalion were Col. Grimston, in command; Majors Roberts and Marsland; Capts. Savage, Spooner, Dawson, Creagh, Gretton, and Thursby; Lieuts. Hon. C. C. Hill, Congreve, Corder, Archer, McMullin, McMahon, Gordon, Vaughan; Capt. and Adjt. O'Beirne and Qrmr. Hanworth. On leave, Capts. Pennington and Cruikshank, and Lieut. Lennock.

DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY. The Teesdale Mercury says:—"The Militia at Barnard Castle are behaving in the most exemplary manner, and they are making great progress with their drill. So quiet and orderly are they in their billets, that a stranger walking through the streets after 11 o'clock at night, would never suppose that a thousand Militiamen were quartered in the town. The regiment has always borne a high name for discipline and efficiency, and the published records of the battalion show that during the war with France, 70 or 80 years ago, the Durham Militia were constantly employed in garrison duty, besides giving hundreds of men to the Line. The regiment, also, during the Crimean War, in 1854, volunteered for service either at home or abroad."

Thirteen regiments of Militia, representing about 10,000 officers and men, assembled on Monday for the annual 27 days' training in various parts of the United Kingdom. The greater part of this force went into camp. On Saturday the training of 17 regiments, which commenced on the 9th ult., was brought to a close, and the regiments dismissed.

The next military competitive examination of Lieutenants of Militia for commissions in the Line will be held on Sept. 17 and 18.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

3RD MIDDLESEX RIFLES. The annual inspection took place on Saturday at Southgate, when the regiment paraded in eight companies of 25 files. Col. Warren, commanding 7th-57th Regtl. District, was the inspecting officer. Col. Warren briefly addressed the regiment, expressing himself extremely well satisfied with the result of his inspection. He concluded by congratulating Lieut.-Col. Church upon having the command of such a regiment.

A correspondent writes:—"In your issue of June 21, you mention that the corps of Engineer and Railway Transport Volunteers is destitute of captains and subalterns. No doubt this is much to be regretted; but I am convinced the vacancies would be speedily filled up if they were generally known of. I think that even the existence of such a corps is unknown to the majority of civil engineers."

ARMY INTER-REGIMENTAL RIFLE MATCHES.

A fair number of entries for the matches which are open to Regular Cavalry and Infantry have been received; but as there are complaints that the period allowed for entering was too short, and that in some cases the printed regulations had not come to hand, the Committee have approved of an extension from June 28 to July 28. Another concession is as follows:—"Individual entries from regiments and battalions which shall by July 28 have made entries to the extent of £5 and upwards will not be considered as 'post' entries, and will be accepted up to Sept. 15." The position for firing in at 200 yards is now, for cavalry, kneeling or sitting, at the option of the firer.

THE RIACHUELO.

The Riachuelo, built by Messrs. Samuda Brothers for the Brazilian Government, was inspected on Monday by Lord Alcester, Lord Ravensworth, Sir John Hay, Rear-Admiral Watson, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, Capt. Codrington, Mr. W. H. Smith, Sir D. Gooch, and Mr. Norwood, M.P. The visitors were received by Mr. J. Samuda, and were conducted over the vessel by him and Mr. Field. The Riachuelo is a twin-screw ship of 6,000 tons displacement and 6,000 horse-power. She is 305 ft. long, 52 ft. extreme beam on water-line, and 30ft. extreme depth, her displacement tonnage being 5,700 tons at load-line. Her draught of water at load-line with 400 tons of coal in her bunkers is 19 ft. 6 in. Her estimated speed with 872 tons of dead weight on board is 15 knots an hour; but on her official trials she attained a speed of $16\frac{1}{4}$ knots with a natural draft, and $16\frac{3}{4}$ with a forced draught. She is protected by armour 11 in. and 10 in. thick respectively, and her armament consists of four 9-in. 20-ton breech-loading rifled guns in two revolving turrets, and six 6-in. breech-loaders, besides 18 Nordenfelt machine-guns; she also carries Whitehead torpedoes. The machine-gun armament of this ship is the most complete one ever supplied to a man-of-war. It comprises five and ten-barrel rifle-calibre guns for landing purposes and use in the tops, four-barrel one-inch guns for defence against torpedo-boats, and two-barrel one-inch guns for use in tops and as boat-guns, as also $1\frac{1}{2}$-inch calibre shell-guns for the ship's launches. Two six-pounder shell-guns are also to be supplied for use against swift cruisers. The Riachuelo is built entirely of Siemens-Martin steel, and her armour consists of a belt of Cammel compound plates, 25 ft. long and 11 in. thick amidships, with 16 in. at the extremities. To a depth of 4ft. below the water-line the armour tapers from 10 in. to 7 in. Forward and aft, internally, reaching from the top of the side armour to the knightheads and stern in armour 3 in. thick, inclined at an angle of 15°. This 3-in. armour is so arranged that it measures and equals 10 in. of vertical armour if struck in a horizontal position. The inclined armour is useful for supporting and giving additional strength to the ram forward, while aft it protects the rudder-head, tiller, and steering gear. A horizontal deck of 2-in. steel armour runs through the ship and joins the inclined armour at each end. On this are two oval breastworks built up of plates and angles and protected by 10 in. armour plates and teak backing. Within the breastworks are two revolving turrets similarly built up and protected, and in each of these are two of the 20-ton guns. A very important feature in connection with these breastworks is that they are en échelon, and are so carried out as to enable the guns in each turret to command an unbroken fire for 180 deg. on their own side of the vessel, and 50 deg. on the opposite side. Thus the whole four guns can be brought to bear ahead or astern, while an all-round fire can be always maintained with two guns, and all four of them can be used for broadside firing on either side of the ship. The guns are loaded by hydraulic machinery, and the turrets are revolved by similar means. The six 70-pounder guns are placed on the upper deck, while of the 15 Nordenfelt machine-guns five are for use in the tops and the remainder are placed on pedestals so as to keep off torpedo boats. The torpedo guns are arranged to fire from five ports, four broadside and one right aft. The engines of the Riachuelo indicate 6,000-horse power, and are manufactured by Messrs. Humphrys and Tennant. They are of the vertical twin-screw type. Each set of engines has one high-pressure cylinder of 52-in. diameter placed between two low-pressure cylinders each 74-in. diameter, with a 3-ft. stroke, and making from 80 to 90 revolutions per minute. Steam is supplied from 10 boilers working at 90 lb. pressure, and containing a total heating surface of 19,400 square feet. Although designed to give, when working at her full power of 6,000 horses, a speed of 15 knots an hour, and to have at that speed a coal endurance of five days, she developed on her trials a 15-knot speed with only 4,500-horse power. Hence at that speed she can run a distance of 4,500 miles without re-coaling. In other words, the coal supply of 800 tons is sufficient for 12 days' steaming at 15 knots an hour. The manœuvring powers of the vessel were tested in many ways, and were found to be satisfactory. The Riachuelo is fitted with steam-steering gear. The berths of the admiral, the captain, and the officers are comfortably arranged and tastefully furnished and decorated, and the ship is lighted throughout by Swan glow lamps of 20-candle power each, taking the current from three Siemens dynamos, the electrical machinery and appliances having been supplied and fitted by Messrs. Siemens Brothers. The vessel as inspected was fully equipped for sea, and after the inspection the visitors were entertained at luncheon in the officers' mess-room.

The Emperor of Germany has given permission to another Naval officer, Corvette Capt. Meller, to enter the Chinese service. Capts. Meller and Lebelin will take out to the East the two ironclad corvettes built for China at Stettin, when an improvement in the relations between France and China permits of their so doing, and enter the Celestial service for a preliminary period of three years.

Mr. Eames, of the Accountant Branch, has been appointed secretary to Commodore Molyneux at Suakim.

The Commission appointed to study the reorganisation of the Spanish Fleet has concluded its work, and submitted a series of proposals to the Government. The Spanish Navy consisted in 1883 of five ironclads, an ironclad monitor, a floating battery, and 117 other vessels. The Navy possesses besides 35 gunboats for the defence of the Isthmus of Cuba and Porto Rico. According to the new proposals, the reorganisation of the Fleet ought to be completed in 10 years, at the end of which time Spain would possess 12 ironclads, two ironclad cruisers, seven first-class cruisers, nine second-class cruisers, 11 third-class cruisers, 32 torpedo-boats, and six transports. A sum of 230,000,000 pesetas, to be spent in 10 years, is demanded from the Government.

Lieut. Somerville Goodridge, Transport Officer at Port Said, has been directed by the Admiralty to proceed to Suakim to take charge of the naval transport duties at that port.

The Briton will shortly be taken into dock at Malta for the purpose of completing the repairs which had been commenced at Bombay when the ship was ordered to proceed to Suakim. Most of her old crew will now return to the Cambridge at Devonport.

The Admiralty have forwarded to the several dockyards a list of the leading men and acting leading men of shipwrights who are to be promoted to inspectors and acting inspectors. They are to be placed on salary from July 1, 1884, and their salaries are to be as follows:—Leading men on wages of £101 8s. a year are to receive from July 1 £110 a year; leading men on wages of £109 4s. a year are to receive from July 1 £120; leading men on wages of £117 a year are to receive from July 1, £130. The first annual increment on these salaries of £5 towards the increment of £150 per annum will take effect from July 1, 1885, in each case. The minimum salary of £100 a year will be the commencing salary of all future inspectors not appointed from the existing leading men, irrespective of the wages they may be receiving when promoted. Inspectors acting as measurers will receive duty pay of £1 6s. a month. No application for a departure from the rates of salaries herein laid down will be entertained. Acting inspectors are to continue to receive their present remuneration as acting leading men.

The Admiralty have lately effected a sweeping economy in one branch of the Naval service. They have discovered that in some cases flue-brushes have been purchased for Coastguard stations, and they have directed that in future these important and expensive articles will not be provided at the expense of the Crown, but must be paid for by the crews of the Reserve ships.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Stornoway, Hebrides, July 7, 1884.

We were to have left Kirkwall at 5 a.m. on the morning of the 3rd, and accordingly the various ships shortened in at daylight on that day; but the fog which prevailed in the early morning, though not sufficiently dense to obscure the ships, determined the Admiral to defer taking his departure until it had cleared up, Pentland Frith, with its swift and varying currents, being an undesirable place to manœuvre a squadron in, in a fog. The whole of the forenoon of that day was passed without any sign of the fog lifting; and accordingly, in the afternoon, the Admiral, having abandoned all intention of leaving that day, made the signal that the usual leave for officers might be granted. The next morning steam was again up, and all the ships ready once more to get under weigh; but the fog appeared denser than ever. However, at 11 a.m. it in great measure lifted, and the Fleet got under weigh, proceeding out of Kirkwall Harbour in columns of divisions line ahead. We had only, however, just got outside the harbour when it came on thicker than ever, so thick that it became impossible to see either the ship next ahead or the one astern, and the flagship therefore made the signal by guns to anchor, which the squadron accordingly did at 2 p.m. in about 25 fathoms. It was fortunate we were not further from the land, as the fog was the densest I have ever seen; and if we had been compelled to proceed in it, through inability to anchor, some unpleasant accident might have been the result. The fog continued the whole of that day as well as the next forenoon, during which the flagship exercised in signalling with the steam sirens. At 3 p.m. on the afternoon of the 5th the fog suddenly lifted, and showed the whole of the squadron anchored in close contiguity to each other. As fires were banked it did not take long to get steam up, and, although there was a good deal of cable out, we were under weigh at 4 p.m., and steaming at the rate of 6½ knots. We had a fair breeze, too, which enabled sail to be made, and the tide was with us, so we did the distance to Stornoway, 160 miles, in about 22 hours, as we arrived off here at 2 p.m. yesterday afternoon. As the Admiral did not wish to disturb the men during the afternoon, the ships eased down in the dinner hour, so that we did not anchor till about 4.15 p.m. The Shannon, Penelope, Hecate, Hawk, and Argus, being of light draught, proceeded into the inner harbour, the remainder of the squadron anchoring in the outer one, a considerable distance from the shore. The weather is glorious at present, and as leave has been granted to the men of each ship to-day, this place is quite overrun. We leave at daylight on the morning of the 9th for Blackrod Bay, in Ireland, where the ships are to coal, but as there is no depôt there, coal for the squadron will have to be sent in steamers. This will be an expensive and troublesome business, and it might very easily have been obviated by sending the ships to Queenstown, where there is a depôt, except that the Admiralty appear to have determined we are to visit none but the most isolated, uninteresting, and ridiculously small places. Up to the present time the officers in the various ships have been unable to get their washing done, and there does not appear to be any probability of their being able to do so until they return to their respective stations. I regret to have to state that at about 4 p.m. on the 2nd inst., a leading seaman in the Hector, named Bagshaw, while the usual evening evolution was being performed, missed his footing, fell from the mainyard to the upper deck, and was killed instantaneously. He was buried on shore at Kirkwall with full military honours. The Admiral has issued an order to the effect that the various chief officers of Coastguard embarked for the summer cruise are, when at sea, to assemble daily on deck with their sextants or quadrants to take observations at noon. As chief officers have hitherto not been required to provide themselves with these nautical instruments, it is difficult to see how they are to carry out this order; and it is certainly hard on this by no means highly-paid class of officer that they should be compelled to provide themselves with these expensive instruments. The Admiral inspected the Repulse to-day. Nothing is as yet known as to the disposal of the Squadron after arrival at Spithead, but it is believed it will be inspected by the Admiralty there previous to dispersal.

Another correspondent writes:—"The Reserve Squadron left the Downs on June 19, and arrived at Heligoland on the 23rd. At that place the Hector landed her acting master, suffering from typhoid-fever. On June 29 the Squadron reached Kirkwall, when the same ship landed one of her lieutenants (not the officer of Marines), also prostrated with typhoid; and at the same place the Hercules landed one of her officers down with typhoid. Surely, out of the numerous medical officers in the Squadron one might have been spared to look after these two officers, instead of leaving them helpless among strangers, in an isolated place, where there cannot possibly be any hospital accommodation, except such as a room in a crofter's house can afford. Three officers taken ill with typhoid on board ship on a healthy cruise suggests that some inquiry be made as to the sanitary condition of the water-tanks and places of convenience on board these obsolete ships. It is presumed there is a medical man of some kind at Kirkwall. Of course, in Heligoland there necessarily will be an hospital and other requisite means of providing what is necessary in such a complaint, which is doubtful in the Orkney Islands. Therefore the more urgent the necessity for a Naval medical officer to have been landed in medical charge."

The Transport Department of the Admiralty have arranged the programme for the Indian troopships for the season 1884-5. The Malabar will leave Portsmouth for Bombay on Sept. 11 and Dec. 9, 1884, and Feb. 28, 1885. The Crocodile will leave on Sept. 20, Dec. 17, and March 4. The Serapis will leave on Oct. 17, Jan. 3, and March 16. The Jumna will leave on Nov. 18 and Feb. 17. The Euphrates, which is at present in the dockyard hands, will be held in reserve.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1884.

LOOKING at the evidence given before the Committee on Commissariat and Transport services in Egypt, any practical Member of the House of Commons must think it day by day more astounding that such a state of affairs could have possibly existed in a country which prides itself on its business habits. That a Ministry with a wholesome fear of the constituencies and a keen desire for retrenchment might be led to sacrifice efficiency to economy is intelligible; but that a system should exist for a single day under which a great public department deals with vast sums of money, untrammelled by financial audit, is astonishing. Yet that this is so is not only a fact, but apparently one which gives the Surveyor-General of the Ordnance no uneasiness. Any one who has watched the evidence given with regard to the enormous losses to the public through purchases of supplies and animals found on delivery to be unserviceable, must have noticed that but for this Parliamentary inquiry the loss would never have become known outside the office of those who made the purchases. Without imputing blame to individuals in a matter which is sub judice, we may be permitted to condemn most strongly the arrangement under which the vouchers and accounts for purchases made by the Directors of Supplies and Transport are examined and passed by one of their own subordinates. In one single instance only did the bad quality of these supplies come to the knowledge of the Exchequer Board; and that by the accident that the supply had not been included in the accounts rendered to the War Office.

It must not be supposed that the examination of the accounts of expenditure for Army supplies is not carried on with care. The smallest error in calculation, the slightest discrepancy between the quantity brought to credit and the quantity paid for, is observed; and the Accountant is called upon for explanation. But should the account show that 500 tons of hay bought on the order of the Director of Supply was, after delivery abroad, found unfit for use, that loss would be known only in the office of the Director. It would, in our opinion, be far from an efficient check were these purchases examined and checked by the Financial Branch in the War Office. An audit, to be effective, should be conducted by officials entirely outside the department which makes the purchases. But under the present system, the Secretary of State for War does not even use his financial branch as a check upon the spending branch, and thus he remains ignorant of the waste of public money which may be going on under his own roof. The proceedings of Courts of Inquiry, the opinions of Boards of Officers, the reports of General Officers on the subject of condemned supplies all go to the Directors who purchased them, and apparently the reports come as little under the notice of the Surveyor-General as the accounts themselves do. How otherwise can he maintain in his cross-examinations that such reports have not reached him? How otherwise can he account for no inquiry having been initiated by him before the sittings of this Committee commenced? It is curious to note how completely the present organisation of the Supply and Transport Department has departed from the primary rules laid down on the formation of the Surveyor-General's Department. Those principles were:—1. Concentration, in one hand, of the direction of all the departments. 2. Sub-direction of each branch by executive officers from each. 3. Financial check by a department independent of the Surveyor-General. The replies of Sir John Adye to questions as to his responsibility, the want of connection between the rail and animal transport, and the general want of preparation, show how far the concentration of direction has been adhered to. The substitution of the civilian for the executive Directors has thrown away the experience which should have prevented the faults which are now in evidence; and by the removal of the examination of the Supply accounts to the office of the Director of Supply and Transport, the Directors are left to play unconcerned with the public purse, at the cost of the efficiency of the Army.

The Military Secretary will not hold a levée on Tuesday next.

The advantages claimed for the modified valise equipment of 1884 over all other valise equipments are as follows:—1. The weight is more evenly distributed. 2. The braces passing down vertically in front do not, under any circumstances, cut the armpits. 3. The pouches can be shifted, if required, to give relief to the soldier. 4. The valise can be put on and taken off by the soldier himself at any moment, without interfering with the rest of the equipment. This is thought likely to be of value in railway or boat travelling, at a halt, on the line of march, &c. 5. When the valise is taken off, the belt and its load are still supported by the braces. 6. The intrenching tool and water-bottle can be carried on the belt without interfering with the arms. 7. Great facility is given for marching in light order, i.e., with great-coat and ammunition, but without valise. 8. The side-pockets for grease and oil, &c., being placed outside instead of inside, prevent the soldier's kit being spoiled by these articles. 9. A small waterproof sheet, which is fastened to the flap, enables the valise to be used as a bed in camp or bivouac. Two thousand sets of this equipment are now being manufactured, and will shortly be issued experimentally to two or more battalions.

A Distinguished-service Reward of £50 a year has been awarded to Major Jones, late Quartermaster, 70th Regiment, with which he served in the Indian Mutiny, New Zealand, and Afghan Campaigns. A second of these pensions has fallen vacant by the death of Captain Timothy Morris, late Quartermaster, 30th Regiment, who had drawn the reward since 1867.

Brevet Major C. S. B. Parsons, R.A., has been appointed provisional Aide-de-Camp to General Sir Lintorn Simmons at Malta. Major Parsons has been four times specially mentioned in despatches for services in the Zulu, Boer, and Egyptian Campaigns.

Candidates for the vacant appointment of Captain of Invalids at the Royal Hospital, Kilmainham, would appear to be scarce, as the vacancy has existed since the death of Captain P. L. O'Callaghan in December, 1882. A Paymaster's Distinguished-service Reward has also apparently gone begging since the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Robinson, some 18 months back.

Notwithstanding official denials and reprimands, it is quite certain that the new pattern swords recently issued are worthless weapons. In a standard dictionary a sword is described as "an offensive weapon, having a long, strong, and usually sharp-pointed blade;" but these Birmingham blades are neither long, nor strong, nor yet sharp-pointed.

Lieutenant Fetherstonhaugh, Scots Greys, has been appointed provisional Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Elliot, commanding at the Curragh.

There are 7 Cavalry and 27 Infantry Regiments, and 9 District offices of various kinds requiring Paymasters, total 43, which total is reduced temporarily by the employment of 10 officers of the Department on the Retired List.

Although four bars to the Egyptian war medal will shortly be in existence, no officer of the Army can lay claim to the full number, and only a few officers of the sister service have been fortunate enough to count "four by honours." It would be interesting to know who are the lucky recipients of all four clasps,—Alexandria, Tel-el-Kebir, Soudan, and El Teb or Tamasi. The generally accepted spelling for the last-named engagement differs, by the way, from the official, which has it in General Orders as "Tamaai." But, then, Horse-Guards spelling gives us both "Affghanistan" and "Afghanistan," "Cabool" and "Kabul" in the list of honours at the head of the unnumbered regiments.

We regret to find that in the list of senior Cavalry Captains given last week, the name of Captain J. H. Banks, 7th Dragoon Guards, was omitted. Captain Banks obtained his commission in June, 1867.

The Duke of Cambridge has had an active time of it this week. In addition to his work at Woolwich on Friday week, his visits and inspections at Chelsea, and his review of Captain Shaw's "Asbestos Invincibles"—a very graceful, gratifying, and much-appreciated act—the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief had an early turn-out on Thursday at Aldershot, but was baffled by the rain in his purpose of "knocking the Division about" on the Fox Hills, and yesterday he had a most satisfactory inspection of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Battalions, Grenadier, and 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards at 9.30 a.m. in Hyde Park. The Field-Marshal was accompanied by Lord Wolseley, Sir A. J. Herbert, and other officers of the Head-quarter Staff. The inspection took place on the Guards' Ground, Hyde Park, in the presence of an immense assemblage, comprising many Members of both Houses of the Legislature, numerous officers of the services, and many ladies. Conspicuous near the saluting base were the Marquis of Hartington, Mr. Goschen, Sir A. Hayter, the Earl of Wemyss, &c. The brigade was formed of four battalions—1st, 2nd, and 3rd Grenadier Guards, and 1st Coldstream Guards. The men were in marching order, and were drawn up in line of columns facing Park Lane, at 9 a.m. Half-an-hour afterwards the Duke of Cambridge and Staff rode on to the ground, and were received with the Royal salute. The usual inspection followed, and the troops marched past in columns of double companies.

Quartermaster-Serjeant Hunter died yesterday morning at the Military Hospital, Sheerness, from injuries received from the bullet wound inflicted by Gunner Eastwood, on Wednesday night. The deceased, who was only 25, was a promising young officer, and the son of a retired Major of the Royal Artillery.

In India drills usually take place before the heat of the day,—say, from 7 to 9 a.m., or in the evening 5 to 7. The same practice it would be wise to adopt here in hot weather. With the thermometer at 80 degrees in the shade and 120 in the sun, sunstrokes are sometimes suddenly fatal, particularly if the head is not well protected and covered. The little saucer caps or monkey caps of some of the regiments look smart, but old officers know the danger of them. The Prussian undress cap is safe and soldier-like. The idiotic glengarry bonnet leaves the left side of the head exposed to the sun and rain, and we have never yet met a foreign officer who did not hold up his hands in amazement at the first sight of the absurdity.

It is not easy to understand upon what principle many orders and regulations are issued. Take, for instance, the Yeomanry Cavalry. Instead of encouraging the introduction of officers who may have served in Regular Cavalry as supernumeraries, in a Yeomanry regiment an order was lately issued precluding such officers, if above the rank of Lieutenant, from drawing pay or allowances during training, even should the full number of officers on the strength be incomplete. Further, no advance has been made towards lessening the cost to the yeoman of the permanent duty. Except in a few corps, the mounted-troop drills previous to the annual training, and which, if the force is meant to be of great use, should be kept up at intervals throughout the year, have been done away with, two extra days of permanent duty being substituted, but without any pay from Government. This has the effect of deterring many eligible recruits from joining the force.

The report that Sir T. D. Baker was to succeed Sir G. Greaves has been confirmed, his name having been submitted by the Commander-in-Chief in India for the appointment, which has, however, to be confirmed by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief, and also, we believe, in this particular instance, by the Indian Council, as Sir Thomas Baker is by regulations ineligible for the appointment, in consequence of not having passed in the native language. Sir Thomas Baker is a most able and excellent officer; but surely regulations are made to be enforced, and not to be neglected or evaded to suit the convenience of any officer, however distinguished. Either the Regulation which requires the Adjutant-General in India to be a passed man is necessary, or not. If it is not necessary, then let it be cancelled at once; but if it is considered desirable that he should be able to speak the language of the very large native army with which he has to deal, and the natives with whom he is continually brought into contact, then it should be enforced rigidly. Looking at the Russian advances and the state of affairs on our North-West Frontier, it is impossible to tell how soon now the Commander-in-Chief in India may have to take command of a large force in the field; and it would not do for his Adjutant-General to be dependent on an interpreter in his frequent—almost hourly—communications with the native troops and followers. Again, Sir Thomas Baker has been in India, and if he wished for this post, he should have qualified himself for it as others have done. The names of four or five officers will occur as in every way fitted for the appointment; and as they have taken the trouble to pass, it is scarcely just to ignore qualifications which are specially necessary in favour of an officer whose merits, though great, are by no means so great as to dwarf those of the five or six other candidates, and to excuse the authorities in India and at home favouring him, in defiance of regulations, and to the prejudice of others with better claims. Only a short time ago a very distinguished cavalry officer (Sir Baker Russell) was passed over for a brigade command in India, because he had not fulfilled certain conditions, not generally known, but existing in the Bengal Code, and the command was given to a junior in the same branch of the service. If the authorities in India had deemed it expedient to make an exception in this case, there would have been some excuse, for the qualifications of the superseded officer are well known. They ruled, however, that "regulations are framed to be adhered to." But now, after having blown hot they blow cold, and suddenly discover regulations are only to be read and not to be binding, and set them aside in favour of an officer who is not eligible in accordance with regulation.

A morning concert is to be given by Viscountess Folkestone at the Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Wednesday next, for the benefit of that excellent charity, the Military Benevolent Fund (instituted in 1875 by Mrs. Ellis-Williams, and which is, by the way, the only one existing for the purpose of granting annuities to Army officers' widows and daughters in necessitous circumstances). The programme is well chosen, the great feature of the concert being that not only the chorus, but the orchestra, also comprising, we believe, every known variety of the violin, is composed entirely of distinguished lady amateurs, under the leadership of that accomplished vocalist, the Viscountess Folkestone. Should any of our readers desire to know more about the Military Benevolent Fund, we would refer them to its founder at 40 Bedford Square, W.C.

Assouan was a legionary station in the time of the Roman annexation of Egypt. It occupies a pretty good position militarily on the right bank of the Nile, below the First Cataract; but it can be turned on the east by the desert routes from Kosseir, from Suakim, and from the Nile itself; and the recent connaissances spoken of by Colonel Duncan were directed to examine those routes, of which two converge and strike the Nile north of Assouan, at the ruined city of Komombo. The routes on the left bank of the Nile cross the desert from various points between Mervë on the right bank from Darfour, Old and New Dongola, and to Assiout, Esneb, and Girgeh cities on the left bank; but they are not likely to be used by any considerable body of men. There is an old Roman wall in places of great strength and solidity running nearly parallel with the road from Assouan to Philæ, which was intended to keep off the Berbers or barbarians, and to prevent their gaining access to Assouan from the Nile. When the Government resolved on an autumn session, we wonder if it occurred to them that they would have so drink deeply of the waters of affliction if the news from the Upper Nile be not good, and it looks very bad indeed. We suspend our judgment about the news of the Mudir of Dongola's defection. Major Stuart-Wortley and Captain Colvile, who are meandering with a very sorry rabble of Bedouin Bashi-Bazouk rabblement in the desert of Lybia, on the left bank of the river, seem, notwithstanding the materials at their disposal, to have made progress in securing the tribes frequenting the tracks between Darfour and Siout.

The preparations supposed to be connected with an expedition to Khartoum are "in a state of suspended animation," as Lord Churchill said of the Franchise Bill. Perhaps they will be galvanised into life by the autumn Session.

COLONEL MIDDLETON.

Gen. Sir R. Taylor issued the following order:—"The Governor cannot allow the departure from the College of Col. Middleton, C.B., to pass unnoticed. For several years that officer has held the important and responsible office of Commandant, and has throughout that period carried out the various duties of that office to the entire satisfaction of those under whom he served, with credit to himself, and with advantage to the establishment. The Governor feels sure that he expresses the feelings of all connected with the College when he records his regret at the loss of such a valuable official, whose services it is satisfactory to know will not be entirely lost to the profession, as Col. Middleton is about to assume the duties of a high and honourable appointment with the rank of Major-General in the Colonies, in which position the Governor wishes him every success, with long life, happiness, and prosperity." Amen, say we heartily. The Governor adds that he has much pleasure in publishing the following farewell address to all his old associates, at the request of the late commandant:—"In giving up his appointment as Commandant, Col. Middleton begs to take leave of the officers and cadets of the Royal Military College; the former have his best wishes and his thanks for the assistance they have given him in carrying out his duties, and the latter have his best wishes for their happiness and prosperity in their future career."

THE BANGALORE CAMP.

Mr. Grant Duff has directed the following ukase to be published:—"The Governor-in-Council, having perused the report upon the camp of exercise held in the vicinity of Bangalore, together with the diaries of manœuvres attached thereto, congratulates his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief upon the complete success of the undertaking. His Excellency concurs with Sir Frederick Roberts in the opinion that the presence of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India during the operations was a subject of general satisfaction, and is happy to have the opportunity of placing on record the appreciation of the Madras Government of the honour done to the Army of the Presidency by Sir Donald Stewart. His Excellency learns with much satisfaction that the dress and appearance of the Madras troops met with the approval of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India. The favourable opinion of so distinguished an officer cannot but be highly encouraging to all who have the efficiency and welfare of the Army at heart."

The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Lord Wolseley, arrived at Aldershot on Wednesday night with the intention of witnessing a sham-fight by the troops on Thursday. A heavy rain set in about 7.30 a.m., and, after waiting about an hour, an order was issued countermanding the proposed manœuvres. The troops returned to quarters about 10 o'clock thoroughly drenched. The Com.-in-Chief and staff left the Camp in the afternoon for London.

The annual inspection of the Yeomen of the Guard, at which the Duke of Edinburgh attended, to the great gratification of these splendid veterans, took place on Tuesday in the garden of St. James's Palace. The parade was under the command of Lord Monson, the captain. His Royal Highness arrived at 1 o'clock, and was received with a Royal salute, after which he carefully inspected the ranks, and expressed himself much pleased with the appearance of the corps.

The next military competitive examination of lieutenants of Militia for commissions in the Line will be held on Sept. 17 and 18.

The remains of Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets A. Irwin, who was in charge of Haslar Hospital until about a month ago, when he was compelled to retire on account of ill-health, were interred at Haslar Cemetery on Saturday. The deceased was about 57 years of age.

It is seldom that one has such a chance of becoming possessor of a "right-little, tight-little island," all to himself, and within a measurable distance of civilisation, as will be offered presently by Messrs. Debenham, Tewson, and Co., whose announcement of the forthcoming sale of the Island of "Herm" appears in another part of to-day's paper. Amongst the many advantages set forth in the prospectus, sporting, agricultural, piscatorial, mineral, &c., we are inclined to place the climate, the sense of possession, the absence of taxation, and the agreeable seclusion which can be broken at will. The Lord of Herm ought to be envied by his neighbours in the adjacent Isle of Great Britain, if he has a steam yacht and good alliances with Jethou, Alderney, Guernsey, Sark, and Jersey.

A. J. Windebank, Esq., Chanda House, Fratton Street, Portsmouth, December 22, 1883:—"Watch, chain, and ring to hand. I am very much pleased with their appearance, the watch especially looking a very strong, handsome one, and equal to many I have seen at double the money."

Mr. H. A. Illingworth, 82 Queen Street, Batley, March 7, 1884:—"After four years' trial of one of your 25s. watches, I now desire to express my thanks for the same. During all the time I have had it I have not paid one halfpenny for repairs. It is as good to-day as ever. When I have shown it to my friends, they have valued it at double and frequently at treble the money. To those who wish to possess a cheap, good, everyday watch, I especially recommend the above."

The beautiful Island of Herm, between Guernsey and Sark, in the English Channel.—A perfectly unique purchase for a nobleman, yachtsman, gentleman, or professional or business man seeking rest and recreation in a charming climate, with a series of attractions which could not be matched within 10 or 11 hours of London. The island is a mile and a half long by three-quarters of a mile broad, and contains 460 statute acres, including 100 acres of highly fertile arable and pasture land, with fine deep alluvial soil, forming by far the largest farm in one occupation in the Channel Islands. The remainder of the land has a picturesque broken surface, and with gorse and cover, and there are some rich feeding lands. Pheasants, partridges, wild geese, and rabbits abound. The entire island is in hand, and available for possession. A good Family House, stabling, and gardens, in a well-chosen and picturesque position in the centre of the island. There are several smaller houses and cottages, and a large hotel. The lands are well adapted for the growth of fruit and the high-priced early potatoes and vegetables which are daily so extensively exported from the neighbouring islands of Guernsey and Jersey. The land could be farmed to great profit, or let at high rents. Exceedingly heavy crops of grapes are obtained from the extensive vineries. The property is likely to prove a good and remunerative investment for capital, besides offering a great scope for residential enjoyment. There are several springs of fine water on the island. The property is held on lease from the Crown (by Order in Council of H.M. George II.), perpetually renewable every 21 years on payment of a nominal fine of £42 and at a rent of £14 per annum, and is free from any rates, taxes, and Government dues of every kind. There is good fishing around the island, and lobsters and crabs are abundant.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, FARMER, and BRIDGEWATER will SELL the above valuable and very attractive PROPERTY, at the MART, on TUESDAY, July 29, at 2 o'clock (unless an acceptable offer be made by private contract). The manager will, with his boat, meet any intending purchaser at St. Peter's Port, Guernsey, by appointment with the Auctioneers.—Particulars, plans, and views of Messrs. ARNOLD and CO., Solicitors, 60 Carey Street, W.C.; and of the Auctioneers, 80 Cheapside.

THE CEDARS and MORNINGTON PARK ESTATES, near West Kensington and Addison Road (Kensington) Stations, Omnibus Route to City, &c.—HOUSES to be LET or SOLD. Rents from £55 to £150. Well built, of white bricks and Bath-stone dressings, admirably designed, with all modern improvements, bathrooms, electric bells, venetian blinds, &c. These well-known and fashionable Estates afford advantages which cannot be surpassed in any of the suburbs. Within easy access of the West End by road or rail, and within the four-mile radius from Charing Cross. For Military and Naval officers and persons of moderate incomes who require good family residences, they are unequalled. Soil is a fine gravel. St. Paul's School (from St. Paul's Churchyard), now being erected on the Estate, will afford exceptional advantages to the sons of residents. Lawn-tennis and ornamental gardens on the Estate for the use of residents.—Particulars post free from GIBBS and FLEW (Limited), Cedars Estate Office, West Kensington Station, W.

TO PARENTS in the ARMY and NAVY.—The under-mentioned (who is in no way connected with the School) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, delightfully situated facing the sea on the south coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

The success, happiness, and training of the boys have been so remarkable in this school that A BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS given by the parents should be read to appreciate results so unusual. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COLDS,

BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

CHOLERA,
DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, Symes and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

THIS Company owns the ALBERT PALACE, which is now approaching completion; it is constructed upon a site facing the beautiful grounds of Battersea Park, originally fixed upon by H.R.H. the Prince Consort as the permanent site for the International Exhibition of 1851, now at Sydenham, and has been erected with the object of providing for the people of London, and especially for the middle and artizan classes, a place of recreation and instruction resembling the Crystal Palace, but very much more accessible.

The property is Leasehold from the Crown for 93 years at a moderate ground rent, and includes land being laid out as gardens with some valuable building land to the west of the Palace.

The Company has also acquired the right to a Lease of the whole of the land lying between the buildings and the Battersea Park Road, subject to their obtaining powers to enclose an intended road, which is only partly laid out, and on this site will be formed a Pleasure Garden, similar to that in the grounds of the Horticultural Society at South Kensington, which, combined with the attractions which will be offered within the building, will furnish all that can be desired to make the Palace perfect in all its varied requirements.

The Palace, which has already been erected, has a total length of 473 feet and breadth of 84 feet. Galleries 18 feet from the ground floor traverse the entire building, and are approached by four staircases.

Attached is a handsome stone and brick building of two storeys, the upper floor of which is reserved for Picture and Art Galleries, and the lower storey is divided into dining saloons, smoking, and refreshment rooms.

Adjoining and forming part of the Palace there is also constructed a grand Concert Hall, 157 feet in length, 118 feet in breadth, and 60 feet high (with a double gallery all round) admirably adapted for musical entertainments. This Concert Hall compares favourably as to the space apportioned to the audience with some of the best known buildings throughout the world devoted to music, as will be seen from the following figures :—

	Length.	Width.	Superficial Area devoted to Audience.
Covent Garden (London)	89	80	7,120

The Palace will be fitted up with every attraction suitable to the Building, and these will from time to time be renewed, so as to present a continuous inducement for the Public to visit the Palace.

The management has been intrusted to Sir Edward Lee, favourably known in connection with the Dublin Exhibition and other undertakings, and whose great experience is thus secured for the benefit of the Company.

In the Concert Hall a magnificent Organ, which the Council have purchased, is now being erected. This instrument is one of the most perfect Organs extant for musical tone, balance of power and constructive art, while there are few that will compare with it for size, beauty of effect, power, and sweetness.

The Council intend that Musical Performances of a high-class shall form a distinguishing feature among the attractions of the Palace, and having regard to the daily increasing love of music among all classes (fostered as it is by the efforts of the Royal Family and others interested in the musical education of the people), there is no doubt that the Musical Festivals and the Concerts which will be given continually throughout the year, will prove a permanent attraction.

Mr. A. J. Caldicott, Mus. Bac., has accepted the post of Musical Director, and his name is a guarantee for the efficiency with which this department will be conducted. He has already successfully organised for the Albert Palace Association a Choir of several hundred voices known as "The Albert Choir."

The position of Director of the Picture Galleries and the Department of Arts has been conferred upon Mr. C. W. Wass, for many years with the Crystal Palace Company, and the Council have obtained the sanction of the Board of Trade to the formation of an Albert Art Union Association, which will form a special attraction to Season-ticket holders, by affording them exceptional privileges.

The Palace is already fully licensed, and there is no doubt that the revenue from the Refreshment department alone will be very large; the Council intend that this shall be made specially attractive, at the lowest remunerative prices, in order that the Palace may become a really popular resort.

The Albert Palace Association, Limited, have taken over the Buildings as they stand from the Company originally formed for their erection, of which the present Company is a reconstruction with enlarged objects. The Share Capital of the present Company has been fixed at £150,000, of which it has been arranged that £145,000, in fully paid up Shares, shall be the consideration for the purchase, and shall be distributed among the Shareholders of the original Company.

On reference to the drawing enclosed with the prospectus it will be seen that the Buildings are intended to be continued over nearly the whole extent of the land acquired fronting Battersea Park, by the erection contiguous to the Concert Hall of a handsome Conservatory, larger in extent than that at Chatsworth, an Aviary, which will be stocked with every description of rare Birds, and also a Hippodrome on the model of that in Paris, which is so well known as a financial success.

The buildings already erected are capable of accommodating 20,000 visitors, and may now be inspected. The site is possessed of peculiar advantages, for while it is within a very easy drive or pleasant walk of the most wealthy districts of the West End, it is in the midst of a densely populated neighbourhood, and is easy of access from the most extended area, by railway, tramway, and steamboat service, at very low fares.

The Debentures now offered for subscription afford a sound and eligible investment; the £327,000 6 per cent. Debenture Stock of the Crystal Palace Company is quoted 120 to 125 per £100 Debenture Stock.

The Debentures will be secured by a first charge upon the entire property and undertaking of the Company, and the whole of the proceeds will be applied towards carrying out the objects of the Company, and the completion of the buildings in accordance with the extended scheme as shown by the drawing accompanying the prospectus. Provision has been made by the Trust Deed by which a sufficient annual payment is secured to the Trustees before any payment can be made to the Shareholders, for the payment of interest and a sinking fund out of which the Debentures will be drawn annually.

The Debentures will bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable at the Company's Bankers quarterly by coupons annexed. The Debentures are repayable by annual drawings from a Sinking Fund of two per cent. per annum, commencing on the 1st July, 1889; the Debentures to be paid off will be the numbers drawn on 1st July in each year.

Application will be made to the Committee of the Stock Exchange for a quotation of the Debentures in their Official List.

The form of Debentures and Trust Deed, and the contract between the Company and the Albert Exhibition Palace, Limited, may be seen at the offices of the Association, or on application to the Solicitors of the Company.

Should no allotment be made the Deposit paid will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of the Company, or of the Bankers.

THE BRITISH ARMY IN EGYPT.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Cairo, June 27, 1884.

The 26th June was the anniversary of the Khedive's accession. The Egyptian flag was flown from all forts and stations occupied by British troops in Egypt, and a salute of 21 guns fired. On the 28th inst. was celebrated the Queen's birthday. At 6 p.m. the troops were paraded in Abdin Square, the infantry in battalions of six companies of 25 files, except the Cameron Highlanders, who for manifest reasons were in two companies of 20 files. The troops formed three sides of a square, in the centre of which floated the Union Jack. At 6.30 p.m., General Stephenson arriving on the ground, was received with a general salute, and proceeded along the front of the lines inspecting the troops, returning by the rear. The Victoria Cross was then presented to Lieutenant Marling, of the King's Royal Rifles, the General dismounting and pinning it to the breast of this distinguished young officer. Medals for distinguished service in the field were then presented, after which the march-past commenced. The men looked smart, and it was a relief to see the familiar red uniform in exchange for the "invisible dirt" grey serge, which during summer time gives the British soldier the appearance of a Whitechapel navvy. The "feu de joie" was omitted for fear that it might alarm the delicate nerves of the Cairenes, and the cheers for her Majesty were also forbidden, probably lest we should offend the susceptibilities of our Republican allies.

The Royal Sussex has been moved from Assiout to Assouan, and the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry will proceed on Wednesday next to Keneh, about halfway between the two places. Assouan is a pretty town, surrounded by extinct volcanoes. Any Tommy Atkins of a classical turn of mind may derive consolation from the fact that it was the place of Juvenal's exile; and he will, perhaps, agree that the climate and general features of the surrounding country are calculated to encourage a disposition to bitter satire and contempt for luxuries. Keneh has a reputation of its own for gawazees and hot weather; but, on the whole, the climate of Upper Egypt is more supportable than a similar temperature would be in the moist Delta.

As to the fate of Berber. From Korosko comes news given in my presence by an alleged eye-witness. The gentleman in question was a native, and his narrative bore certainly all the appearance of veracity. By way of encouraging him in the paths of truth, he was informed that he would be detained until confirmation of his story or the reverse arrived, and that in the event of it proving untrue he would be hanged. To this communication he gave a smiling assent, and it appeared neither to affect his spirits nor his appetite. He stated that he had escaped from Berber with Cuzzi, the telegraph-clerk, that he had been captured and compelled to return with him to the camp of those besieging Berber, that the garrison fought bravely for two days, that the town was then rushed, the garrison and many inhabitants put to the sword, while the Governor, Hussein Halifa, whose servant he professed to be, was wounded in the leg and badly treated in prison. Two of Hussein Halifa's 200 sons were present when he told this story, and professed to believe it. Now as to dates, about which natives' ideas are generally of the vaguest, it was naturally extremely difficult to be certain; but making liberal allowances it seemed as if the taking of Berber could not have been later than June 2. The story, telegraphed to Cairo, was discredited by Sir Evelyn Wood for two reasons, which do not seem of quite equal value. 1. That Colonel Chermside had information declaring Berber still in the hands of the Government on June 3; and 2nd, that the fall of Sebastopol was rumoured in London several months before it happened. Kitchener, thus challenged, appears to have found further evidence, details got more circumstantial, relatives of soldiers in Berber wailed for them as dead, and after much resistance, authorities in Cairo officially announced the fall of Berber. No sooner, however, is this done than the obstinate Chermside worries up a pilgrim, who is ready to swear that he was at Berber on June 7, and that not only was the town safe, but that provisions were plentiful and cheap, so that we are again in a state of uncertainty.

During the absence on leave of Major-Gen. Earle, the troops in Alexandria are under the command of Sir C. Ashburnham.

The 17th Compy., R.E., left Cairo for Suakim on the 25th inst., and embarked on board the s.s. Lochard, for Suakim. Major Peck, R.E., proceeded to Suakim. Surgeon Gallwey, has returned to Cairo from Assiout, and been posted to the Citadel for duty. Surgeon-General Irvine will be replaced during his absence by Surgeon-General Fox. Major Woodall, A.P.D., will take over from Captain Nott, who proceeds to England at his own expense, the South Staffordshire Regiment. Lieutenant W. A. Smith, attached to G Brig. is struck off the strength from June 27. Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordance Ozanne was taken on the strength from the 27th inst.

"COMPARATIVE NAVAL ANATOMY."

In the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, No. 51.—Spiridion Jopcevitz, (author of "The Supremacy of the Baltic,") gives a summary of the armoured Navies of the various Powers at the present time. In the middle of 1884, he says, the total number of ironclads (including those constructing) is 318, of which 69 belong to England, 65 to France, 38 to Russia, 31 to Germany, 23 to Holland, 21 to Turkey, 18 to Italy, 16 to Sweden, 13 to Austria, 9 to Denmark, 7 to Spain, 4 to Norway, 2 to Greece, and 1 each to Portugal and Roumania. In this number, river and shallow navigation vessels are included, of which France has 4, Russia 2, Germany 4, Holland 5, Turkey 6, Sweden 11, Austria 2, Spain 2, Roumania 1, and Italy, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Portugal, and England none. The number of ironclads fit for service is only 230, of which England possesses 57, France 39, Russia 30, Germany 24, Holland 18, Turkey 15, Italy 13, Austria 10, Denmark 8, Spain 5, Sweden 4, Norway 4, Greece 2, and Portugal 1.*

In the above table, only those ships are included which are afloat or so far advanced in equipment that they might be employed. For a "modern" ironclad, armour at least ten inches thick and guns of at least eight inches calibre are assumed as requisites. The French ironclad corvettes are reckoned amongst battle-ships. No fleet can manœuvre with a greater speed than eight knots, as any vessel exceeding that speed would be in danger of ramming her own consorts. Lissa and Alexandria have shown that, immediately after the opening of fire, smoke and steam envelope the ships to such an extent that temporarily they entirely disappear; signalling is out of the question, so that a vessel must be considered fortunate which can work its way out of the chaos without being rammed. If, therefore, a battle had to be fought near the coast against a blockading fleet, all coast-defence vessels of a speed of eight knots, able to keep the sea for two or three days, could be entered in the fleet. Germany could employ 24 ironclads in the attack on a blockading fleet, of which only four would be obsolete vessels. If we apply the same measure to other Powers, we arrive at the following figures :—

	Ironclads.
	Modern.	Obsolete.	Building.
England	34	20	12
France	23	10	22
Russia	3	15	6
Germany	20	4	3
Holland	11	...	...
Sweden	...	...	1
Norway	2	...	...
Denmark	4	4	1

The number of armoured ships which, owing to their storage of coal and their sea-going qualities, may be employed for expeditions, including in this category the armoured cruisers, is as follows :—

	Ironclads.
	Modern.	Obsolete.	Building.
Turkey	6	8	...
Italy	...	7	5
Austria	3	7	...
Spain	...	4	...

The first rank is still occupied by England, the second by France. Russia, which thirty years ago held the third place, and even to-day, if we reckon by the number of ironclads, should still occupy it, has, as a matter of fact, resigned its position to Germany, and is satisfied with the seventh place. The fourth rank belongs to Italy; the fifth place, if we only judge by the material, ought to be assigned to Turkey. The sixth would be due to Austria, the eighth to Holland, the ninth and tenth to Spain and Denmark, the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth to Sweden, Norway, Greece, and Portugal. Germany, which thirty years ago possessed only a few miserable vessels, has assumed the third rank as a Naval Power.

---

* The figures in parentheses have reference to ships still building or equipping, and consequently not yet available for service.

† Including the three monitors of the Indian and Australian Colonies.

‡ Including the Tonnerre type, which, although really a coast-defence vessel, may be classed as a battle-ship on account of her speed and other sea-going qualities.

§ Including the Spiridoff and Lazareff types, for the same reasons.

‖ Heligoland and Odin, for the same reasons.

Portugal, the great Naval Power of the sixteenth century, whose fleets commanded two oceans from Brazil to New Guinea, has sunk to the fourteenth and lowest place. Spain, whose armadas in the sixteenth century formed the bugbear of Europe, which scarcely a century ago occupied the third rank, has now fallen to the ninth. Holland, whose naval power in the seventeenth century successfully resisted the united fleets of England and France, must at the present day be satisfied with the eighth place. The great Naval Powers of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway have descended from their grandeur to the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth rank. In a few years' time most of the ironclads now constructing will have been completed, and most of the obsolete vessels struck out of the various navy lists. England will then have 46, France 45, Russia 11, Germany 23, Holland 11, Turkey 6, Italy 7, Austria 7, Denmark 5 ships, Sweden and Portugal each 1. Russia advances from the seventh to the fifth place, and Turkey falls back into the seventh. The hegemony of England is seriously threatened. At one time it was a well-established maxim in England that her Navy must be as strong as two of the strongest Naval Powers together. But in 1890 the French fleet will be pretty nearly a match for the English Navy. As a matter of fact, it will be even superior, for England has to guard so many interests that her fleet cannot concentrate. At any rate, the English Navy will have to be divided into two parts, the Channel Fleet and the Mediterranean Squadron. Lord Beaconsfield has said in his time that England is also a Mediterranean Power. England, says the writer of the Heeres-Zeitung, will perish through this. If war were to break out between England and France in 1890, the latter might appear in the Channel with at least 42 ironclads, and would find at most but 30 ironclads to oppose them. For 4 armoured vessels are constantly employed by England on foreign stations, and the Mediterranean Squadron numbers at least 12 ironclads in critical times. If, therefore, England desires to remain "a Mediterranean Power," she will have to make tremendous efforts in order to be on a level with French naval power in 1890. If, however, England were to withdraw from the dilemma by evacuating the Mediterranean, this would involve the loss of Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, and Egypt. In no case, therefore, are the prospects of the future very comforting for Albion which now "rules the waves." Germany, on the contrary, will not only be respected by England and France as a Naval Power, but would be able to maintain the sea against a coalition of the Baltic Powers and Holland.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Officers commanding mounted corps have been reminded from the War Office that Clause 85, Army Circulars, 1881, is still in force, and that charges to farriers for horse-shoes and nails should be regulated accordingly. The Annual Aldershot Divisional Polo Pony Race Meeting will be held on the 25th inst. Six races are on the programme, two of which are open to officers of the Army and Navy. A detachment of A (Pontoon) Troop, R.E., proceeded, with bridge-equipment and stores, by rail to Shrewsbury on Thursday last, to be employed for the Corporation of that place in bridging the Severn. A Troop, R.E., will proceed to Chatham about the end of the month for a course of pontooning on the Medway. The Royal Horse Guards have been ordered from Windsor to Aldershot for annual course of musketry by squadrons. The first squadron arrived at the Camp on Monday last. The 2nd Battalion, Grenadier Guards, will arrive here for annual course of musketry and military training about the 15th inst.

A board of examination (Lieutenant-Colonel Boughey, 62nd Wiltshire Regiment, president), assembled on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last to examine in subjects (c.) to (e.) 40 officers of all arms, who have recently undergone a course of garrison instruction, in accordance with instructions contained in Sec. IV., Queen's Regulations.

Several cases of diphtheria and one case of small-pox have recently occurred here, the latter having been imported from London by a regiment of Militia.

Two sections of the Telegraph Battalion, Royal Engineers, will shortly be raised to the war establishment. Captain Baxter, R.E., has been ordered to Colchester.

Surgeon-Major W. C. Gasteen is in readiness to proceed to the Mediterranean.

The Empress Eugénie's Cup, to be run for at the Aldershot Divisional Summer Race Meeting, on Saturday, the 26th inst., is of the value of 100 sovs. The Empress and suite are expected to be present on the occasion.

In future, duplicate remittance lists are, directed by Fleet Circular No. 17 A.G., not to be transmitted to the Admiralty, except when there is reason to believe the originals have miscarried, in which case they should be sent in explanatory letters, the reason of their transmission being also explained on the face of the lists. Whenever it is necessary to transmit duplicate lists, they are to be prepared from the counterfoils of the receipts in the Remittance Receipt Book, S.—39 (as revised), and the captain is to satisfy himself, before approving them, that the total amount thereon as remitted corresponds with the entry in the cash book.

Russian Travellers in Mongolia and China. By P. Piassetsky. Translated by J. Gordon Cumming. 2 vols. (Chapman and Hall.)

It seems rather unusual to publish a work of this class without a preface or index, or any introductory observations calculated to inform the reader on some important points. This custom has not been followed in the present instance, no doubt, for some good reason. The reader, however, can glean from the first half-dozen pages that on March 14, 1874, the author left St. Petersburg, accompanied by M. Sosnowsky, who took charge of this little expedition, and M. Borwisky, a photographer; also, that an omen of dire portent occurred, that seemed likely to paralyse the expedition, which, it appears, was a scientific and commercial one. The travellers, whose numbers were increased by M. Matoussowsky, topographical surveyor, and by three Cossacks, Pawlow, Smokotnine, and Stepanow, managed some way or other to lose all the money, the weight of the chest in which it was packed up having smashed the bottom of the carriage and come to pieces itself, leaving the ground paved with silver. As the author very pathetically says, when brought face to face with the disaster, "Conceive our position. Had we only discovered the absence of the chest, and the consequent loss of the silver later on here, at one blow would our journey to China have been at an end,—how overwhelmed with shame we should have been." However, it all went right, and the party reached Irkoutsk, the capital of Eastern Siberia. Here another new member joined the expedition, M. Andreiewsky, who had been previously engaged as interpreter, but who, rather unfortunately, was blissfully ignorant of the Chinese language. This gentleman's justification for his conduct was the fact that his salary was only to be 600 roubles. Kiachta, the frontier boundary between Russia and China, afforded much pleasure to the travellers, although its outward appearance is not very striking. It is constituted by a waste piece of ground above 250 yards wide; two old wooden posts covered with mud, and without any mark or inscription, alone denoted the limits of the frontier. The author, however, found plenty to occupy his thoughts and indulge his imagination in the interior of "Kiachta," the city with one street. The singularity of the scene excelled everything he had ever seen in Europe, one of its most remarkable features being the originality of the monster idols and ornamental lamps, and the darkness which surrounded the statue of Confucius and the smaller idols at the end of the temple. After all this mental excitement, the members of the expedition had to prepare to pay a visit to the great Tzargoutzi, who received them with great politeness, and at the same time gave them some useful hints about their further travels in Mongolia. While this was going on, the author indulged in a description of his Mandarin:—"He wore a straw hat conical in shape, ornamented by a tuft of red horsehair and surmounted by a blue button; he might have been forty years old, spoke fast and energetically, and when any one addressed him in Russian, he fixed his eye on the speakers, as if he was listening intently, or even as if he understood what was being said to him." The second chapter of this work contains a highly interesting description of Mongolia, its men and women, its scenery, and its customs. The men and women, it appears, dress nearly alike,—in wide trousers and a brilliantly-coloured dressing-gown, the collar crossing on the chest. From their girdle hangs a knife, a spoon, and chopsticks, besides their pipe and tobacco-pouch, the whole of Chinese manufacture. They wear boots, and a hat with a turned-up brim, to which blue or red ribbons half a yard long are attached to the back. They wear their hats on the back of their heads with strings under their chins. The men, as Chinese subjects, shave their heads, leaving a tail at the back. The women wear two plaits, which fall on the chest or on the shoulders. Cleanliness is unknown to them; the men seldom wash, the women never. In summer, they change their linen once a month; in winter, not at all. Their principal nourishment is tea with milk, and airyk, a sort of koumiss made out of cow's milk. The Chinese sell flour to them, with which they make unleavened bread. Meat is accessible to the rich alone; the poor only eat the flesh of animals that have died. At "Ourga"—a city famous for its idols—the traveller saw the enormous bronze statue in the Temple of Maïdan. It is the statue of the principal deity, and is dressed in yellow satin; in height, it reaches 75 ft., and was brought in separate bits from Thibet, where it was cast in bronze, to Ourga. When in that city, military manœuvres were organised in honour of the strangers, which cannot pass quite unnoticed. From the temple, the guests proceeded to the camp of the Chinese garrison. The soldiers were dressed in vests of black cloth, with round patterns of red or white on their breasts, embroidered with letters or figures to indicate their subdivisions or companies; they wore wide, black trousers, white canvas shoes and gaiters, and on their heads black handkerchiefs, twisted like turbans. At a thrice-repeated blast of the trumpet the camp became suddenly agitated, the soldiers emerged from the barracks and ran right and left. Some carried flexible pikes, others guns, some of them of very large calibre. On a given signal the soldiers changed front, left the yard, and, after describing a semi-circle on their return, formed two lines on either side, and a half-circle facing the spectators; the drum beat, the copper lo resounded, a halberdier advanced from the ranks and saluted us—he advanced running, jumping, twisting, and flourishing his weapon about like a practised gymnast. This course of action was repeated some half-dozen times, and thus ended the manœuvres. It never would have done to proceed further without interviewing Khoutoukta, the High Priest of Thibet. The travellers were received simply and pleasantly and regaled with tea. &c. The author thus describes his appearance:—

> "About 40 years of age, of middle height, thin and yellow, his shaven head, his bright and intelligent black eyes, his pleased and interested expression were more characteristic of the Caucasian than of the Mongolian race,—a dark yellow mantle thrown over one shoulder covered his whole body, except one shoulder and arm,—and he wore a cinnamon-coloured robe under his mantle, a bolster on his divan, a small table beside it on which were a lamp and some glass cases containing little copper idols; on another table a bundle of papers with prayers, and his snuff-box, which he used perpetually. Simple in manner, he was very dignified, and seemed more like a European, or even a man of the world, than a barbarian from the deserts of Asia."

In every way was the interviewing a complete success. The great High Priest submitted gracefully to the art of the photographer, and was delighted with the author's water-colour likeness. On August 11, 1874, the expedition said farewell to the steppes of Mongolia, and proceeded to Pekin, which city in some particulars greatly disappointed the travellers. The arrangements for watering the streets afford some amusement. The water is taken from the puddles and ponds at the corners of the streets. These ponds are first filled with rain-water, and all the sewage goes into them as well. The Chinese water the streets from these ponds to get rid of the dust, which towards evening becomes suffocating, gases and miasma fill the air, and the odour becomes unbearable. If this be a sample of what is to be endured in the great city of Pekin, in other respects it is not surprising to learn that "everything in the town is going to rack and ruin,—trumpery side by side with gold, ruins next to marble bas-reliefs and precious carvings; but the artistic and noble remains of antiquity put all that is modern into the shade. The town is not less full of interest, as it is the centre to which the life of the people converges, and the mainspring of all its material and intellectual riches." The author and his friends were fortunate enough to meet with several officials holding various positions, who, actuated with kindly feelings, volunteered their assistance; but there was no necessity to trouble them, as, immediately on the arrival of the expedition, its members had been introduced to M. Popow, the dragoman of our embassy, who paid them every attention in his power. Under his care, they wandered about the Chinese quarter, visiting "the Beggars' Bridge," with all its horrible surroundings. On August 30, an expedition was organised to the suburbs of Pekin. This was a happy thought, and the reader should on no account pass glibly over what was witnessed, and what is so graphically described by the author. We dwellers in England are no doubt passionately fond of sport, under which denomination comes cock-fights, horse races, and very many others that can be easily enumerated, but a fight between "crickets" no doubt presents a novelty. The author gives an amusing description, first of the mode employed in hunting and entrapping the poor little cricket, and then the details of all the particulars of a contest which is carried on with a solemnity that is infectious. But we must hurry on to the tournament. The owners of the crickets first settle the conditions of the combat and other details, and then the spirited little creatures are let down into an open flat-bottomed box, with perpendicular walls. The moment they "get touch" of one another, they engage in battle just as cunning wrestlers do, and fight wickedly, with pointed mandibles, till one has to retire or is hurled out of the box. Strange as it may seem, enormous sums have been gained and lost in these "affairs." As a contrast to the above, the author takes us to the Chinese quarter to see the Temple of Heaven, close to the south gate but it failed almost entirely to prove interesting. A sketch of a Chinese dinner may prove another matter, and deserves some attention, at a time when all London is rushing by day and night to visit the Chinese quarter in the Exhibition at South Kensington. On this occasion, the dinner was ordered the night before at a restaurant. Everybody being assembled, the waiter asked whether the courses should be served Chinese or European fashion. We all agreed to follow the custom of the country, reserving the sweet-meats for dessert. They first served pickled cucumbers cut in slices, then boiled peas and beans made into a paté of a sour, salt taste. Then came ham in thin slices, and "ducks' heels," or the soles of the ducks separated from the skin before it is cooked; next an arrangement of meat, with vinegar and cayenne pepper, which burns the throat; pickled garlic, eaten as radishes, the hearts of cabbages cut in thin slices, and black radishes; then salted ducks' eggs. These are boiled after they are salted, and then surrounded with lime for two years. After these side-dishes, the dinner began with a soup of swallows' nests, with mushrooms and buttered eggs very finely grated. These nests are in high repute, and on the sea coasts are sold for their weight in silver, while further inland the prices go as high as four times that amount. We cannot do more than summarise the rest of this dinner, of which what we have written contains the "first course." Second course, soup of sharks' fins, holothurians, resembling leeches; third course, duck with imperial rice; fourth course, carp with sweet sauce; fifth course, sturgeons, ham, and dried fish (three dishes in one); sixth course, pork and mushrooms; seventh course, boiled fowl; eighth course, roast crabs; ninth course, root of tziao; tenth course, lobsters; eleventh course, sharks' fins. So much for the dinner. Then came puddings and sweets of every kind, followed by dessert, and brandy with rice wine; and immediately after the whole party adjourned to the theatre.

A Standard despatch from Simla, dated July 5, says it is understood that the Afghan Boundary Commission has been completed, except on some details connected with the negotiations between England and Russia, A telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times says:—"Communications regarding the Boundary Commission are passing between the Government of India and the Ameer. The former is believed to have now before it proposals of the Commander-in-Chief as to an escort to accompany the Commission. Among the reports in circulation is one that the Russian escort will consist of a regiment of cavalry, a battalion of infantry, and a battery of artillery, and that the English escort should be of equal proportions. The Ameer will probably be asked to send some troops with the Commissioners in addition to the British escort to prevent trouble with the nomad tribes.

The report that the Bengal Army was about to be strengthened by the formation of new regiments is officially denied.

The Punjab Frontier Force will move during the season of 1884-85:—No. 1 (Kohat) Mountain Baty., Abbottabad to Kohat, starting Feb. 5; No. 2 (Derajat) Mountain Baty., Edwardesabad to Dera Ismail Khan, on March 2; No. 3 (Peshawur) Mountain Baty., Kohat to Edwardesabad, on Feb. 21; No. 4 (Hazara) Mountain Baty., Dera Ismail Khan to Abbottabad, on March 10; 4th Sikh Infantry, from Edwardesabad to Kohat, on Dec. 13; 1st Punjab Infantry, from Kohat to Dera Ismail Khan, on Nov. 20; 5th Punjab Infantry, from Dera Ismail Khan to Edwardesabad, on Dec. 5.

SHIPS' STEWARDS, R.N.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—When the hon. Member for Devonport, Capt. Price, R.N., stated in the House that he could not see the reason why ships' stewards should not receive the recent rise of pay of their class, as well as other petty officers, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman gave a somewhat sharp answer, no doubt taking the class referred to for that of general mess stewards. As the hon. Member, Capt. Price, R.N., stated, there has not been any rise of pay for the ships' stewards since 1861, which remains, 1st class, 3s.; 2nd class, 2s. 6d.; and 3rd class, 2s. per diem, each being classed as chief petty officers, while others of the relative ranks are receiving their 5s. and 6s. Schoolmasters and writers have no reduction in pay, as the ships' stewards have when in a receiving-ship as supernumeraries, which is often the case, and that for very lengthened periods indeed, especially for the 3rd-class ships' stewards, after being promoted from assistant-stewards. This deprives each class of exactly one-half of its pay. A ship's steward leaves the ship in which he has been serving to go to a receiving-ship to remain for months (and even years) on, as it were, half-pay. No other class of chief petty officers are served so. Great responsibility rests upon the ships' stewards serving afloat, where they have access to stores worth hundreds of pounds. Then it is easy for a man, even of good-conduct, with such a low rate of pay, to be tempted to compensate himself by the appropriation of some of these stores under his charge. But Mr. Bannerman cannot see this, nor the good to be done by increasing the pay of this class, in which so much trust is reposed. It is the opinion of many paymasters that if stewards were placed on a different footing, with a standing rate of pay, like that of schoolmasters and others of relative ranks, there would be no more of the Cambridge affairs, for better pay would undoubtedly increase their zeal for the service. The paymasters, too, I think, may do a great deal in this matter, considering that they look to the ships' stewards for everything to go on right under their direction. Also, why should the ships' stewards' assistants be kept so long, after being qualified for the rank of ship's steward, without any increase of pay (some seven years, and never less than six)? In many cases he has a wife and family to maintain upon 1s. 4d. per diem; and yet, after three years' service, he is qualified for a ship's steward in any of H.M.'s ships. In fact, the ships' stewards, stewards' assistants, and stewards' boys are by far the worst paid branch of the Navy. Surely their position wants, as the hon. Member, Capt. Price, R.N., said, a thorough revision, and I hope that the hon. Member for Devonport will not fail to endeavour to secure an inquiry into our case.—I am, &c., SHIP'S STEWARD.

JOHN SULLIVAN, R.N., V.C.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I trust you will not think it out of place to call attention to the sad death of Mr. John Sullivan, V.C. (late chief boatswain of Portsmouth Dockyard). Mr. Sullivan's Naval services probably stood higher than those of any other officer of his class in the service, yet he was superseded from his appointment for no other reason (so far as outsiders can see) than to make room for another. No other officer had ever been superseded from such an appointment, except for misconduct. No wonder Mr. Sullivan (with such a record of service as he had) should break down under such treatment.—I am, &c., JUSTICE.

The annual inspection of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, was held on Wednesday by the Duke of Cambridge. The boys, who number about 500, where drawn up in line on the green facing the building. The Duke, on arrival, was received with a royal salute, and at once proceeded to inspect the boys. He then took up a position at the saluting base, and the boys marched past. They subsequently were put through a variety of exercises. At the conclusion the Duke said a few words in commendation of the drill, and the prize-winners were mustered in front of the line, and the whole body was marched into the dining-hall, where the Duke presented prizes to those boys who had distinguished themselves in study, music, and gymnastics during the past year. His Royal Highness in addressing the boys on their duties and prospects, expressed his satisfaction with their appearance, and hoped that many of them would join the Army. The boys then sang the National Anthem, and the proceedings terminated.

The idea placed before the public for approval and support in the prospectus of the Albert Palace Association, which will be found in another part of the paper, appears to be excellent, and the names of the council of administration give a guarantee of the substantial character of the enterprise. Without wishing any harm to "The Crystal Palace Company," which has, however, allowed its charming possession to lapse for the time into the status of a most objectionable second-hand bazaar stall, we hope that the immense population within an easy distance of Battersea Park may see the programme of the prospectus in full working order presently.

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

Obituary.

Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets Ahmuty Irwin died at Southsea on July 3. He was the eldest surviving son of the late Very Rev. Dean and Vicar-General of Ardfert, Ireland. He received his first commission in the Royal Navy in 1851, and served on the South-American station. Was subsequently appointed to H.M.S. Retribution to render assistance to the Turks, and was wounded in action at Sinope in 1853. Received the thanks of the Admiralty. He was present at the bombardment of Odessa, and at attack on the sea defences of Sebastopol; served with the Naval Brigade in the trenches for eleven months, was severely wounded, mentioned in despatches, and promoted. Was present at the bombardment and capture of Kinburn, and received the following decorations:—Crimean medal with clasp for Inkerman and Sebastopol, Knight of the Legion of Honour, Order of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal. Was present at the bombardment and capture of Taku Forts and Ningpo, was in several engagements against the Taeping rebels, and especially mentioned in despatches; received the China medal with clasp for Taku and Imperial Order of Valour 1st class. Served with the Naval Brigade at Cape Coast Castle during the Ashanti Campaign, was mentioned in despatches, promoted and decorated with the Order of the Companion of the Bath. He subsequently served as Deputy-Inspector-General in Jamaica and Malta, and as Inspector-General at Plymouth and Haslar until his retirement, in failing health, on the 4th of last month, in the 55th year of his age. In 1881 he was invited by his university to accept the degree of M.D., which was conferred in the following words:—"Five monarchs have decorated him with their insignia, and we now, honoris causa, decorate him with ours."

John Sullivan, V.C., chief boatswain, R.N., who was for nearly ten years in charge at Portsmouth Dockyard, died last week at Cork. His sudden supersession in the post of chief boatswain of Portsmouth Dockyard for no assignable reason so prayed upon his mind that he was shortly after his return home attacked by paralysis of the brain, and although he rallied after a time, he at last succumbed, leaving several daughters unprovided for. The heroism of John Sullivan is proverbial. He served his country well, especially in the Crimea with the Naval Brigade. He was present at the battle of Inkerman, and took part in the siege of Sebastopol. As "captain" of a gun in No. 5 battery, he made the first breach in the Malakoff Tower, and blew up its magazine. He attained so great a celebrity as a "crack" shot that Lord Raglan, Admiral Lyons, and others, attracted by his fame, went to No. 5 battery to witness his practice against the enemy, and while there had the satisfaction of seeing him dismount one of the heavy guns in the Russian redoubt, being the third he had that day disabled. On the morning of April 10, 1855, a concealed Russian battery suddenly opened fire on the works of the allied forces. A guide being wanted to direct the answering fire, a volunteer was called for to plant a flagstaff on a small mound between the opposing batteries. There was a pause—death stared the men in the face. But the pause was only momentary, for young Sullivan, seizing the flag, leaped the breastwork, and ran steadily towards the mound, exposed the while to a galling fire from the Muscovite sharpshooters. On reaching the perilous position, he was cool and collected enough to make observations, right and left, to satisfy himself that he was in the exact line between the Russian and British guns. Then, kneeling down, he scraped with his hands a hole for the flagstaff, and made it secure with stones and clods of earth he collected there. He had sufficient time and presence of mind to watch one of the sharpshooters firing at him, and to notice that he was too excited to do his work well. He then returned to the battery miraculously unhurt, to receive the applause and congratulations his heroism deserved. The flagstaff served its end, and the dreadful battery was silenced. For thus gallantly running into the "jaws of death" he was awarded the Victoria Cross. In 1858, he jumped overboard from the Gorgon, in Halifax Bay, when a strong tide was running, and it was pitch dark, and rescued a man who had fallen overboard. For this brave act he received the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society.

London Amusements.

The Royal Italian Opera, COVENT GARDEN, gave the postponed performance of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" on Monday evening, Madame Patti's Zerlina being the chief attraction. On Tuesday night "Faust" was suddenly substituted for "Rigoletto," in consequence of Madame Sembrich being indisposed. "Il Trovatore" was repeated on Thursday for the last time this season, and "Semiramide" is announced for this (Saturday) evening. The German opera season terminated on Friday with "Lohengrin."

A crowded and distinguished audience welcomed the promised elaborate revival of "Twelfth Night" at the LYCEUM on Tuesday evening. Miss Ellen Terry played Viola with all that intelligence and winning grace which had been so confidently anticipated, and Mr. Henry Irving's effective embodiment of the vain old steward, Malvolio, was certainly not disappointing. Still, the general audience seemed to find that the comedy afforded them less gratification than they had hoped to experience. The play throughout was very fairly acted, and in some respects the cast was better than any of late years. The stage decoration is superb, but the embellishments are more than are requisite for the play, and the beauties of the Shakesperian text seem occasionally obscured by the series of brilliant scenes which distract the attention of the spectator.

At the GAIETY, Madame Sarah Bernhardt has played Adrienne Lecouvreur with all her wonted intensity, and later in the week, "Frou Frou" was included in the programme with success.

The Haverly Minstrels at DRURY LANE have this week pleasantly varied their programme. New songs and dances have been introduced into the burlesque operetta of "The Princess of Madagascar," and Mr. Charles Heywood shows off not only his vocal powers but the command he has acquired over his aviary of performing birds.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION will be opened on Monday next at the new palatial structure adjoining the Baker Street Station of the Metropolitan Railway.

The annual series of Promenade Concerts will be commenced at COVENT GARDEN THEATRE on Aug. 9.

The last nights of "The Rivals" are announced at the Haymarket. The Princess's will close on Saturday morning, July 19. On the same day, the St. James's will be closed till September. Mr. J. L. Toole has now ended his season, taking on Thursday his annual benefit, which was associated with a remarkably attractive programme. On this (Saturday) afternoon, Mr. John Clayton and Mr. Arthur Cecil have a special performance for their benefit, and the Court Theatre will then close for the usual autumnal vacation. To-night, the Comedy Theatre will also terminate its season, and next week the opera of "La Mascotte" will be transferred to the Standard.

Mr. Augustus Moore, who is well-known for his talent and energy in the theatrical and literary world, will accompany Mr. Wilson Barrett's company as acting manager upon their provincial tour, which commences with "Woman and the Law," at Hull on the 28th inst.

Mr. Charles Duval had the honour of appearing at the Marlborough House garden-party on the occasion of the celebration of the birthday of the Princess Victoria of Wales.

"A Quartermaster" writes:—"In your issue of the 7th ult., you published a communication from a correspondent signing himself 'M. D.,' reflecting injuriously on the conduct of the quartermasters of regiments serving in India. I venture to remonstrate against the allegations contained in that communication."

THE debate on the Navy Estimates in the House of Commons on Tuesday night was of its usual discursive character; and to many of the worn-out controversies, such as the use of a Naval officer as Superintendent of a Dockyard, the relative advantages of dockyard and contract shipbuilding, the grievances of dockyard hands, &c., most of our readers will reply, with us, connu! and pass on to more interesting topics. It was redeemed from barrenness by Sir Thomas Brassey's explanations relative to the recent creation of the "Royal Corps of Constructors," which, he tells us, is required to raise the position of the Shipbuilding Department at the Dockyards, and the subsequent discussion by Commander Price, Mr. W. H. Smith, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, and others relative to our Naval strength, and some statements made by Lord Northbrook on Thursday week in the House of Lords. In regard to the "Royal Corps of Constructors," we trust that it may prove to be a real reform, involving something more than a change of name with more pay and gold lace for some fortunate individuals. It will be a clear advantage if the new corps is more distinctly acknowledged as an official career intimately connected with the Navy, as with the French Génie Maritime. The want of such a class has been long felt; they should wear uniform, hold a place in the Navy List as officers, and it would be well if a part of their education could be made to run pari passu with that of Naval officers on first entry, as is, we understand, the French custom. In any case, we believe the step now taken to be in the right direction; and there is no question as to the advantage which would accrue from the attempt which is to be made to "decentralise the management of the Dockyards in a larger degree than at present, to do more designing work at the Dockyards and less at the Admiralty." All similar questions to the above must, however, seem of small importance compared to that of our Naval strength, present and prospective; for, unless all Naval officers are mistaken, the Naval power of this country, on which her prosperity and even her existence daily more directly depends, is yearly becoming weaker in comparison with that of Europe, and especially with that of our ancient rival, and the speeches on this point, to which much of the discussion was directed, are accordingly of great interest. On former occasions we have called attention to the extraordinary exertions which have been made of late in France to place their Navy on an equality to that of this country, and we purpose giving further details on this subject; but it should not be forgotten that this is only a part of the question, and, bearing in mind the injunction to treat every friend as a possible enemy, it is most important to point out that the Italian, German, and Russian navies are being greatly increased by powerful and efficient ships, and more especially by torpedo-boats. so that our Naval power, compared to that of the world, is being gradually whittled away even while we maintain our Fleet at something like a normal standard. As a French writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes said seven years ago:—"L'importance de la Marine, s'est accrue par le fait des changements survenus dans l'assiette politique de l'Europe: il n'y avait en Europe que deux puissances maritimes, il y en a cinq aujourd'hui." We cannot, then, rest satisfied with Lord Northbrook or Mr. Campbell-Bannerman as to the exertions now being made to keep this country pre-eminently the first of maritime Powers; and we cannot but regret that the First Lord, impelled perhaps by circumstances, although in the "serene atmosphere" of the Upper House, has treated this too much as a party question, from which we are glad to acknowledge that the Secretary did much to withdraw it in his moderate speech in the House of Commons. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman informed the House that he "entirely agreed" that the power of our Navy "must be beyond dispute," and that "it was not from any niggardly spirit, or any fear of opposition in that House or outside of it, that they contented themselves with the proposals they had made." This, in general terms, is the statement of the Admiralty; but Lord Northbrook was more explicit, and he made two statements against which we must enter a protest. 1. That if the Admiralty "were granted three or four millions to-morrow," they would "have great difficulty in deciding how they would spend the money." 2. That England "possessed ten first-class ships to the French three." Taking the "difficulty" first, we can only say that, seeing that we are not, as we hold, making sufficient exertions either in providing ourselves with ironclads, with cruisers, with torpedo-boats, with torpedoes, or with ordnance, we would suggest that the difficulty might be considerably lessened by simply duplicating the present orders in all these classes of ships and weapons, guns being ordered from Elswick if Woolwich cannot produce them. As to the ten first-class ships to the French three, there is a boldness about the statement which is somewhat sensational. There is, no doubt, much room for difference of opinion as to what constitutes a first-class ship, but in the above statement, which is almost a reductio ad absurdum, the First Lord has evidently made arbitrary rules to fit the English ships, and exclude the French. If we take, as a rule, for a first-class ship 8,000 tons' displacement, 12 inches of armour, and 25-ton guns, to be built of iron and fairly sea-going, we shall include eight ships only in the English Navy, viz., Inflexible, Ajax, Agamemnon, Dreadnought, Thunderer, Devastation, Neptune, Alexandra. Lord Northbrook's other two must be taken from Temeraire, Conqueror, Colossus (not ready), Monarch, Orion, Belleisle, or Glatton, which for one reason or other do not comply with the terms of the equation. The French ships to which he presumably referred were the Admiral Duperré, the Dévastation, and the Foudroyant, all powerful ships, carrying 46-ton guns, but he has omitted all the remaining 19 cuirassés d'escadre of the French Estimates, as well as the garde-côtes Tonnant and Vengeur, which carry 46-ton guns and have 14½ inches of armour. Of the cuirassés d'escadre the Redoubtable has 13¾ inches of armour, and carries 23-ton guns, and both this ship and the Friedland are built of iron or steel. Several of the remainder are wooden ships, not more powerful than our second-class ships of Invincible type, but the Indomptable, Terrible, Caiman, Furieux, Fulminant, and Tonnerre all figure as completed ships, and, though mastless monitors, are most formidable. The last three are under 6,000 tons, but the first three are of 7,168 tons each, with 19½ inches of armour and carry or are to carry 75-ton guns. We do not undertake to say that these ships are all ready for sea, but they are all afloat. The Tonnerre was launched in 1875, the Fulminant in 1877, the Terrible in 1881, the remainder last year, so that they are all well in progress. It is probable that the First Lord knows that there had been some delay in equipping these ships, and we trust that it is so, but it is not safe to depen entirely on others making faults which we can only avoid ourselves when they have surmounted them. With regard to the arbitrary standard which we suppose to have been taken; it is, then, enough to say that, assuming a standard of 40-ton guns and 14 inches of armour to resist the French ships, the number of first-class ships now complete would stand as follows:—England, 1; France, 5; and we think we have fairly capped the First Lord's statement. We printed last week the opinion of a German writer as to the Navies of the various Powers, and the conclusion which he drew, that while England is at the present moment still decidedly the first of maritime Powers, in 1890, the French, with 45 ironclads to our 46, will be "pretty nearly a match" for us, is one which is far too true to be satisfactory.

THERE is a strong tendency in political circles to increase the civilian control in the administration of the Navy, and, for that matter, in that of the Army too, and of the country generally. This is yearly made more and more apparent by the debates in the House of Commons when the Estimates are brought on. That such a tendency should exist among our politicians is to be deplored, but it is after all only natural that it should, for the Government of England is civilian in everything, from the parish vestry to Downing-street. It is this Civilian Administration of the affairs of the country that makes the position of Member of Parliament worth having and holding, for it creates no end of civilian patronage, that is to say, snug billets to be filled by civilians who are lucky enough to enter the Civil Service when young, or, who, when more advanced in years, have the influence and support of a Member of the House of Commons at their command. Hence it can very well be understood that the greater the number of appointments thrown open to civilians in both the Navy and the Army, the greater the chance of each individual Member of the House of Commons being able to provide, while in Parliament, for some relative, friend, supporter, or dependent. No wonder, then, that the Royal Dockyards have for years past been regarded with covetous eyes by place-hunters and patronage-mongers; who would reduce these useful establishments to mere repairing yards, so as to throw more contracts and money into the hands of private yards, and at the same time place the Royal yards under civilian control, by doing away with all executive Naval supervision, such as that exercised by the Admiral or Captain Superintendent of the Yard. This would, of course, increase the number of appointments open to the members of the Civil Service, while still further reducing the chances of employment which by right belong to Naval officers. The attempt to bring about this so-called reform is renewed in the House of Commons with each successive debate on Naval matters; and the representatives of Naval constituencies are even insulted by men like Mr. Illingworth for having the courage of their opinions and the well-being of their constituents at heart. "Every year," said Mr. Illingworth, on Tuesday last, when the Naval Estimates were being discussed, "the House had to listen to a number of Members representing dockyard constituencies, ventilating in that House the alleged grievances of the employés. At the present time, when the price of labour was falling, it was positively indecent for Members whose position was by no means disinterested, to ask for increased pay for the dockyard employés." Then, following the lead set by Mr. Rylands, the hon. Member went on to assert that "it was impossible for the dockyard officials to supervise the work in such a way that it should be as cheap as contract work;" and he then went on to advise the Government to cease building ships in the Royal Yards, make all appointments in the latter civilian, and have all men-of-war constructed in civilian yards. He would prevent "the whining appeals on the part of the dockyards getting into the Press and going forth to the country," by appointing a financial Committee to deal with all these matters "in a quiet business-like way." We all know what that means,—nothing more nor less than the arbitrary supersession of every old servant of the Crown by some political supporter of a Member voting with those in office. We seem, indeed, to be fast drifting towards the American custom of turning-out civil servants with each change in the Presidency; for, were Mr. Rylands and Mr. Illingworth able to carry their arguments to a logical conclusion, and to enforce it, they would pitchfork hundreds of civilians into offices now held by executive officers and pensioners belonging to the defensive forces of the country; and, as a matter of course, when the Opposition came into office, their friends would demand a turn at the "loaves and fishes." In Germany, France, Austria, Russia, and Italy things are managed very differently. These are all military Powers, and their peoples have come to acknowledge that military forces, to be efficient, must be administered by officers brought up in the military profession, and not by civilians educated at a college or university. What can the latter know of the art of commanding men and maintaining discipline? And yet, unless men are properly commanded, and discipline is efficiently maintained, there can be no Military force worth the name. It is, in fact, civilian government that is ruining both the Navy and the Army of this country; and the sooner the fact becomes generally recognised, the better will it be for the interests of the Empire. Thanks to civilian government, we now can boast of a Navy without guns, with few ships, and with fewer torpedo-boats, when compared with the Navies of foreign Powers in regard to the duties each has to perform; and, at the same time, we possess but an Army of boys, totally unfitted to bear the brunt of a European campaign.

THE torpedo-boat is a craft whose tactical value in Naval combats is, as yet, unknown. Used for the first time on anything approaching a large scale by the Russians in 1878, the results achieved were, at best, but unimportant. This was due to the fact that the torpedo-boats were in most instances wanting in speed and handiness, while their crews hardly knew how to manage them. Since then important improvements have been introduced into the construction of these novel engines of maritime war; and, at the present moment, torpedo flotillas are being formed and experimented with in England, France, Germany, Austria, and Russia. Torpedo-boat tactics are, in fact, being studied by all the Great Powers. Papers have also been read by Naval officers and torpedo-boat builders at the various Naval Institutions in all countries; but while the discussions these gave rise to were being carried on, experiments were made by France, when results of a most startling nature were secured. It will be remembered that two torpedo-boats were recently attached to the French Evolutionary Squadron, and proceeded with it on a cruise in the Mediterranean. These boats accompanied the Squadron as far as Tangiers, and took part in all the manœuvres of the Squadron during a period of some two months. The facts then brought to light have been discussed at length in the French and German Press. The Journal de St. Petersburg reproduces in its issue of July 1 an exceedingly well-written article which appeared in the Journal des Débats on the subject, and discusses the future prospects of torpedo-boats and their influence in Naval combats at great length. The facts on which this article is based have already been noticed by us. Admiral Jaurés conceived the idea of making an attack on his squadron with its two torpedo-boats. Accordingly, on the night of June 7, while off the Algerian coast, this attack was delivered under conditions exceptionally favourable for the squadron, the full moon shining so brilliantly that everything for miles round could be seen as distinctly as at mid-day. The torpedo-boats were, therefore, placed at a disadvantage, as, in real war, such a fine night would hardly have been selected for the work. Nevertheless, the boats got unperceived to within a thousand mètres of the squadron. The armour-clads were proceeding at a speed of nine knots; the torpedo-boats were steaming eighteen knots. Hence the two would meet in exactly one minute and two seconds. What could the armour-clads do in that interval to save themselves from being sunk by their adversaries' torpedoes? Nothing, or next to nothing; as the torpedo-boats can slip their torpedoes without having to actually close with the attacked ships, and when four hundred yards from the latter, have very great chances of succeeding, and at three hundred yards the absolute certainty of sending every torpedo straight to its mark. Hence, argue our foreign contemporaries, a torpedo-boat attack must succeed against a squadron composed of ships armed like the French, with slow-firing revolving cannon and heavy ordnance. Furthermore, no ship can depress its guns sufficiently to enable their projectiles to strike close alongside. Round every ship there is a zone within which the torpedo-boat is out of danger; and even allowing that it extends but twenty-five yards from the water-line, still, to reach it unharmed, after being first discovered, would be no difficult task in the minute and two seconds those on board the armour-clad have at their disposal in which to sink the torpedo-boat by the fire of their guns. How many rounds could they fire in the time? Are men to be supposed to be constantly stationed at one or more guns ready to fire the moment a torpedo-boat is seen? If so, and even supposing the men to be on the alert, to lose no time, and to be able to open fire at once, the revolving cannon in the top and on the bulwarks could not fire more than fifteen rounds from each gun. These would not, could not, concentrate their fire on a single boat, as a torpedo-boat attack will assuredly be made by a flotilla. Nor will the night on such occasions be as favourable as it recently was on the Algerian coast. Even then the electric light was used. Each armour-clad carries but one of these, and that light must, after discovering a torpedo-boat, be kept turned on that one craft as long as she floats. This means that, in a squadron of six ships, the six lights will be entirely engaged in lighting and following the movements of six boats, so that, should there be a greater number than that in the attacking flotilla, the remainder will continue to advance unseen, and, therefore, in perfect safety, especially on a dark night. Thus, according to the present state of affairs, the armour-clad is certain to be reached by the torpedo-boat, and that the issue of the fight between these two engines of maritime war, between "the giant and the microbe of the sea," is in no manner doubtful. "But," say our contemporaries, "it is affirmed that the English have 'practically' solved the problem how to defend armour-clads, by suspending wire netting round them to a depth of two mètres. Is this really a practical invention? Is it not rather the fancy of a theoretical engineer, a fancy which will never resist experience? The speed of the armour-clads when thus encumbered with heavy appendices is reduced to six knots, and whether under the circumstances they can steer and manœuvre, no one knows. There is some talk of experiments being made next year. That will be another expenditure of a few millions; granted! The experiments, however, should be thorough; they must be undertaken in heavy weather, in a heavy sea, under the normal conditions of the ocean during a cruise. But, pending these trials, and that facts have spoken, it is admitted (1) that a squadron of armour-clads thus hampered to protect them from torpedo-boats, has its speed reduced to six knots as a maximum; and this exposes the squadron to the attack of the rams manœuvring against it at a speed of from 16 to 20 knots; (2), that the squadron is condemned, from the same cause, to search the surrounding water with its electric lights, which is diametrically opposed to all preconceived notions and the practice of olden times, as each ship is thus made a clear target of for the gunboats of the future." We agree with our contemporaries that these facts cannot be too seriously considered. The gun, the ram, and the torpedo are the three offensive weapons of modern maritime war. What is required is to determine their right functions, their maximum utility. It is necessary to ascertain whether this is obtained by their being united in an armour-clad, with speed and manœuvring power so deplorably reduced, or whether it will be found in giving to each weapon a peculiar craft of its own, having a speed far superior to that which it is possible to impart to the modern armour-clad. In a word, the question is whether the units of combat shall be single or triple. The Débats is of opinion that the "triple unit" will have to be adopted, and, up to now, everything tends to confirm this view of the question. All experiments have pointed towards the division of the modern weapons of war; and yet, so far, the most important factor, numbers, has never yet been taken into account, and has been absent from all trials. Thus, for example, last month off the Algerian coast, under the full moon, during magnificent weather, with a smooth sea and light wind hardly ruffling the surface of the Mediterranean, when the attack had been previously announced and the time at which it was to be delivered made known—namely, between 9 and 10 o'clock at night—a torpedo-boat succeeded in approaching to within 1,000 yards of the French squadron unperceived, and a minute later was rounding too, at the rate of eighteen knots an hour, not five yards from the side of Admiral Jaurés' flagship. Imagine in real war what would be the surprise, the emotion and commotion, the panic on board and among the armour-clads, if the number of attacking boats were not one, but twenty, thirty, fifty, aye, a hundred! Why, in the space of a short minute an armour-clad fleet could be swept from off the face of the ocean, and that nation's navy become a thing of the past! The more one considers the subject, says the Débats, the more evident does it appear that an armour-clad squadron, attacked by a torpedo-boat flotilla, armoured gunboats, and a few rams designed to manœuvre at high speed, is a squadron destroyed; while for the cost of one armour-clad could be constructed that flotilla of torpedo-boats which, fighting under the cover of darkness against an enemy of gigantic size, forces him to surround himself with light, and thus attract the fire of the gunboats under cover of which the swift rams could dash in and give the floating monsters their coup de grâce. The opinion thus expressed by our foreign contemporaries is the same that we have held for many years. Indeed, it was mainly through the light thrown on the subject in our columns that the Admiralty were led to announce, through Mr. Goschen, when he was First Lord, the abandonment of the policy of constructing monster armour-clads like the Inflexible. How often have we not pointed out that, for the cost of such a ship, four gunboats, or swift rams, or a whole flotilla of torpedo-boats, could be constructed? Now, after millions of money have been squandered, our views are being generally adopted; and at the present moment, a flotilla of torpedo-boats is assembled at Portland, under the command of the Duke of Edinburgh, to repeat on a larger scale the French experiment. The result would hardly be doubtful, were it not that the English armament is far better adapted to repelling torpedo-boat attacks than the French. All that can be done now is to exercise our officers and men in the duties of watching for, discovering, and endeavouring to repel, or to devise means to repel, attacks made at night by torpedo-boats in large numbers, so that in time of war these duties may be performed with as little confusion as possible. It would, however, be well for the country if the Royal Corps of Constructors were to turn their attention to designing a ship which shall be proof against torpedoes, instead of wasting their time in the production of a new uniform to distinguish them from the rest of the world. Time enough for that when their work renders them worthy of the honour.

IT has been truly said that while we may claim to be a warlike race, we are not a military nation. The average Englishman in his heart entertains something akin to contempt for systematic preparation for any eventuality not immediately apparent, which he looks upon as unpractical and suitable only for "doctrinaires," with the result that in warlike matters we are usually found in an unprepared condition. It is an old and true complaint that our Army is never ready to take the field at the outbreak of war, as is testified by numerous committees and commissions whose recommendations are conveniently forgotten as soon as the emergency is over; and in spite of the Naval motto, "Ready, aye ready," our Navy is in many respects but little better organised for immediate action. We do not now propose to refer to the strength of our ironclad fleet or to our material generally, though it is but too evident that while systematic "programmes" of Naval construction have been approved and are being carried out in the French, Italian, and German Navies, ours is little better than a hand-to-mouth policy; but we allude to it as an instance of the want of foresight to which we are endeavouring to direct attention. We wish now to point out certain blots in the personnel of our Navy and Reserves, to which our attention has been directed by the recent essays published by the United Service Institution "on the distribution of the personnel of the Navy on an outbreak of war." It is at first sight satisfactory to find that all writers and speakers on this subject are agreed that our Naval Reserves are neither paper Reserves nor inadequate to our immediate wants, as calculated by the number of our disposable ships. For their efficiency we are much indebted to Admirals Tarleton, Phillimore, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and Hoskins, who have held the appointment of Admiral Superintendent of Reserves, and we are glad to acknowledge the establishment of this office, as one of many useful reforms due to Mr. Goschen; but though our Reserves are fairly numerous and efficient, there is a great want in that the Reserve contains neither Engineers nor Stokers, on whom the mobility of our ships must mainly depend. Captain R. H. Harris, R.N., in his Essay, which was favourably mentioned, quotes on this subject Sir T. Brassey's allusion in Vol. IV., British Navy, to the opinions of Admiral Elliot and Ryder in their report on the designs of our ships of war advocating an Engineer and Stoker Reserve, which is worth repeating. After stating that "there are 3,500 Engineers belonging to the French Navy, of whom, in time of peace, the most part are allowed to serve in merchant steamers of any country, and France would be enabled by this means to provide every ship of the Navy in time of war with engineers in full practice;" they continue:—"There is reason to believe that many stokers would enter the Reserve on the same terms as the seamen. They could have a certain instruction in the use of arms. . . . . . During their four weeks' drill, they would go from time to time for instruction in the art of driving the engines, and would receive, according to their merits, first, second, and third class certificates." That some scheme of this nature should be at once adopted we have no doubt, and we feel much obliged to Sir Thomas Brassey and Captain Harris for rescuing it from oblivion. Turning now to the personnel of the active Navy, we are struck by the large and increasing number of non-combatants forming the crews of H.M.'s ships, calculated at 14,000 or 15,000 men by the naval essayists. This is due to over-division of labour and a natural jealousy of a sailor on the one hand, or a stoker on the other, being taken away from his proper duties for other employments. The intention was undoubtedly good, but it is curious that in this respect the custom of the Navy differs from that not only of all foreign Navies, but of our own Army. In our Navy all engineers, stokers, artificers, bandsmen, cooks, stewards, and other classes known as idlers, are non-combatants. In foreign Navies all these classes, and in our Army artificers, bandsmen, and officers' servants, are trained to arms, and in most cases commence their career as sailors or soldiers. We can have little doubt which course is the right one, and of the steps which should at once be taken to train to arms every man who is entered on the books. That the facts are serious there can be no doubt. Admiral Sir A. Ryder recently informed us that whilst his flagship in China had no less than 37 per cent. of non-combatants, the French flagship had only 7. Rear-Admiral J. C. Wilson, in a lecture delivered by him in 1875, showed that our non-combatants in the ironclads Hotspur and Devastation were 58 and 50 per cent. respectively, while in the Royal Albert and Immortalité, wooden screw ships, they had been 10 and 20 per cent. only. That something would have been done long since to remedy this dangerous state of things we have no doubt, but for the practical difficulties inseparable from having no regular naval barracks. Admiral Wilson says truly:—"Without barracks, where such men like the sappers and miners could be regularly disciplined and trained, I fear this sad blot on our naval system must remain." Now that we are building barracks in earnest at Keyham, for which a sum of £25,000 is voted in this year's estimates, we trust that the Admiralty will take this important subject in hand, and that regulations will very shortly be issued with a view of erasing this blot from our naval escutcheon.

The Admiralty have awarded the Good-Service Pension of £180 per annum, placed at their disposal by the promotion of Captain Heneage to flag rank, to Captain Thomas Barnardiston, late senior Naval officer at Bermuda.

Portsmouth Harbour, as is usual at this season, contains a good many yachts, while the jetties, with the exception of a couple of troopships alongside the slips, are deserted. The reconstruction of the sheer jetty is proceeding with tolerable despatch; and when completed, it will be capable of supporting any load. The large basin is occupied, as usual, chiefly by the turret-ships, "ancient and modern." The Collingwood is under the sheers preparing to receive her armament, and the Colossus is still undergoing the apparently interminable process of "finishing." She is to be ready for the pendant this year. The Donegal, which is to replace the Vernon, is also in the basin. The Edinburgh is still in No. 13, and the Shah in No. 12 dock. The Polyphemus, in No. 10 dock, appears to be at length approaching completion, and will probably be out again in the course of the summer, when no doubt she will vindicate the character claimed for her by her admirers. Alongside the North Wall is the Blazer, gunboat, having on board, in a Vavasseur carriage, the latest edition of the 6-in. breech-loading gun, with certain improvements in the breech arrangements.

In a very pleasant little brochure Sir T. Brassey describes a run of "11,506 knots in the Sunbeam" in 1883, in the course of which he visited Malta, Gibraltar, Madeira, the West Indies, the still vexed Bermoothes and the Azores, the palmy isle of St. Lucia and "balmy Trinidad." The sheets are printed for private circulation; but we hope we may be able to extract a few passages which bear on the view taken by a Civil Lord of the Admiralty, who is a thorough sailor, of some of our Naval establishments. Sir T. Brassey is the right man in the right place. He is, however, we suspect, much happier when he is threshing through a seaway close hauled than when he is threshing through the Estimates in the House of Commons, though he certainly did his work thoroughly well this week, and stood to his guns under a very heavy fire from a formidable enemy,—torpedo-boats, ironclads, privateers, and professionals.

The rescue of the survivors of the Greely Meteorological Expedition is an interesting and welcome incident, but there will be some irritation among the old arctic navigators that the Americans have got nearer to the North Pole than they did. Much good may it do our cousins, say we. The papers and records have been saved, and we expect some very pleasant reading when they are published, as well as a good deal of information about the "Polar Ocean."

Mr. Rylands "strains at a gnat" when he attacks the grant of stationery allowances to naval officers. Two nights in succession he has hammered at the same nail. We can assure him that the Paymasters of the Navy are generally out of pocket by the transaction, as they have not only to meet the wants of their own staff, but are called upon to afford the necessary material for the Captain's correspondence; and we may point out to the Member for Burnley that the allowance has not been increased during the present generation of the Accountant Branch of the Navy. Were a system of supply in kind from Head-quarters inaugurated for the naval service, Admiral's secretaries and Paymasters would, from the non-arrival of their requirements when on distant stations, find themselves minus the wherewithal for carrying on their trade; and the cost of purchasing the same, in the Pacific, for instance, be "pro-di-gi-ous," and make Mr. Rylands stare if he saw the bill. We would advise him to turn his attention to the abuses which so largely exist in the stationery department, in preference to animadverting on a system which has not yet brought gain to the recipients. But Mr. Rylands is always "hard down" on the Navy.

Lord Ravensworth's Committee has, we hear, brought its investigations to a close. The members of the Committee are, however, said to be divided amongst themselves, Captain Codrington being of opinion that the evidence heard only warranted some slight changes being made in the management of our dockyards, while the civilian element in the Committee, representing important ship-building firms, which have everything to gain and nothing to lose by a change, recommend considerable alterations being made in the yards, and the mode in which our warships are built. The Irish Times would like to know why the Irish dockyards are deprived of their fair share of building and repairing work for the Navy. Cork and the dockyards of the Lee would employ many more hundreds of skilled hands, did the English Government grant fair-play to Irish labour.

The Philadelphian cricketers are to visit Portsmouth on August 1 and 2, when they wlll be opposed, on the Recreation Ground, by a team composed exclusively of naval and military officers, and will afterwards be entertained after a sumptuous fashion by their antagonists and the services generally.

The Army and Navy Challenge Cup and prizes are to be shot for at Wimbledon on Tuesday and Thursday, General Eyre's prize on Wednesday, and the Brinsmead Challenge shield also on Wednesday. For the cup, two representatives of each regiment or ship fire seven shots each at 200 and 500 yards; the best 50 men winning prizes, from £10 to £2, and competing in the second stage for the cup and £10. For General Eyre's prize, the same two men fire seven shots at 600 yards, as a file. The prizes are £10 to the best file; £5 to the second; £3 to the third; and £2 to the best fourth file. Besides these, £100 is waiting to be won two years running, or three years at intervals by the same regiment. For the Brinsmead Shield, teams of six, from the Regular or Reserve Forces, compete at vanishing targets in skirmishing order. These are the chief special military prizes.

The Daily Telegraph asserts that the Chinese Government has rejected the French ultimatum, and that war was certain. The Austrian Abendblatt declares that China had agreed to satisfy the French demands, and that peace was assured.

In the Gazette of last Tuesday, the new Warrant was more than once quoted as "the Royal Warrant of June 10, 1884." It is now, therefore, considerably more than a month since the Warrant was signed and nearly three weeks since the issue of the July Army Circulars which promised that the new Warrant would "shortly be issued." But, as far as we can ascertain, nobody outside the War Office and very few inside have yet seen a copy; although it is already in use, and being applied to the cases of officers who have never had a glimpse of its contents.

The occupation of Berbera promises to afford another warm corner for the British soldier,—or, haply, for the salamander Marine.

Baker Pasha, who still suffers from the result of his wound, will leave town shortly for the seaside to gain a little strength ere he returns to Egypt in the autumn. The recent operation has been successful, but there has been a great loss of bone, as the shrapnel shattered the processes, and there is a large interior cavity to be made good. It is curious that there was no mention of his reception by his old regiment at Shorncliffe when the Prince and Princess of Wales graciously visited them to distribute their medals, &c. We understand that Baker Pasha received a real ovation from officers and men.

The Sandhurst classes were dismissed on the 15th inst., and already a number of officers are on their way to study positions and to prospect famous battle-fields. We hope the cholera will not interfere with them.

It is absolutely a fact that there are some battalions of regiments serving in the United Kingdom with a full complement of 850 rank and file. Of course, we know that, should one of these battalions be ordered abroad, at least 450 of the men at present composing it would be left behind. Nevertheless, there are a certain number of battalions with 850 individuals in the ranks, some few good soldiers, a few more capable of becoming soldiers, and a large number of very questionable calibre indeed. One of these regiments is stationed at Cork. And now will be seen the exquisite sense of humour of the War-Office authorities. While there are many battalions on the low establishment of 350 rank and file, and having the full complement of 25 officers, the battalion referred to above, with its 850 men, has at the present moment but 20 officers for the performance of all duties. Truly ours is a wondrous military system.

The increase of two battalions—say, 800 strong each—to the strength of the Army of Occupation in Egypt, will place an additional expenditure on the exchequer of the Pashalic of about £75,000 per annum.

More fortunate than General FitzJohn Porter,—whose restoration to the Army of the United States, solemnly declared by competent tribunals, after a full investigation, to be an act of tardy justice, and the redressal of a grievous wrong, has been barred by iniquitous party and financial combinations,—General Görgey, who capitulated with the last of the Hungarian Armies, after Bem and Dermbinski had been defeated in 1848, and who has since been living under the stigma of treason and cowardice, has just now been solemnly pronounced to be innocent by a High Military Council at Pesth, which has found that his capitulation was the inevitable result of the military situation. Hungary was over-run by the Russians, without a word of remonstrance from England or Europe in 1848-9, and six years later British troops were face to face with the soldiers of the Czar, on whose breasts glittered the medal for "Hungary and Transylvania."

We are glad to see that Lord Strathnairn is about to call attention at an early day to the failure of the short-service system to recruit the Army with efficient soldiers. The veteran Field-Marshal is a good judge of what a soldier ought to be. He has seen the troops of all the armies of Europe in peace and in war. He was the Commissioner to the French head-quarters in the Crimea; he led in an arduous campaign a conquering army through Central India; he commanded in Ireland during one of the severest crises of revolutionary excitement in that country; and he has, from the time when as plain Lieutenant Rose he began his military career and attracted the observation of his seniors by his courage and conduct, devoted himself entirely to the study of his profession, in combination with its highest phase of usefulness,—diplomatic action. We are informed that Lord Strathnairn will call the attention of the House of Lords to the desperate attempts and expedients of the War Office to obtain an Army by enlisting boys, in the hope of feeding them up on what he terms the "physical equivalent" system, the result of which he describes as being the inundation of the Army with "short-winded, pigeon-breasted, dwarfish recruits, unfit for service in the field." His lordship has one advantage in belonging to the Upper House, and we hope he may long be enabled to make use of it; he cannot be counted out; and if sometimes inaudible in the gallery he has the satisfaction of knowing that his remarks will certainly appear in print if they be forwarded to the proper quarter. Of course, we shall have Lord Morley repeating the usual commonplaces, doling out the customary assurances, indulging in the often-falsified prophecies, and gilding the discussion with the roseate hues of youthful hope for the future. But when Lord Hartington has admitted that the Army is 9,000 men short after all the wonderful manipulation which was to give us such magnificent results, we think that even the apologist in the leading journal who has so complacently announced the utter failure of the long-service system, will be forced to admit that the short-service system as yet, without any pressure of war at all, has not been a conspicuous success. The one hopeful thing about the Army is the tendency which has been developed amongst many of the class who may be described as gentlemen to enter the ranks; and the abundant supply of materials for filling up the commissioned ranks, which an inspection of the military academies and the establishments at Woolwich and at Sandhurst prove to be of most admirable physique and spirit.

In view of possible complications, the Malta garrison should not be allowed to run too "low;" and there is more reason than ever for looking after Gibraltar at present.

A correspondent writes from Egypt:—"Preparations for the forthcoming campaign in the Soudan are going on steadily. A leather water-bottle of the Egyptian Army cavalry pattern is being tried for cavalry and mounted infantry. It is a pity that the requirements of the infantry are being overlooked in this respect. The present water-bottle is far too small, and during last campaign I saw men supplementing them with wine bottles, &c. The arrangements for replenishing the water-bottles were very bad. Each brigade had a certain number of water-barrels under the command of an officer. After two-thirds of the march a certain number of men from a regiment was marched to the water-barrels and the issue commenced; each man carried about six water-bottles, and as the tap was a small one, the process of filling was very slow; and as it is impossible to see when the bottle is full a good deal of water was wasted, and as the halts were short only half the men got water; then at each halt the same thing is repeated with another regiment. A large trough should be attached to each cart, with a few funnels; and if a measure to hold just the quantity of a bottle were used, the water could flow from the barrel to the trough and be dipped out by the issuer, saving loss of time and waste. I give the suggestion for what it is worth. The mounted infantry will shortly be increased to about twice its present strength. The 19th Hussars will be mounted on Syrian horses and others purchased in this country."

On the occasion of the great Parisian fête of July 14, the scholastic battalions were passed in review. A number of our French contemporaries object to this "playing at soldiers," but it appears to us that when these lads pass into the ranks of the Army, as they will do with universal service, the drill-serjeants will find themselves spared a good deal of trouble.

We are glad to perceive that Major Stuart-Wortley, who left Assiout on the last day of June, arrived on July 10 at Beris. But what his object in the expedition from Siout through the desert, with his 550 camels and 500 Bedouins was, we can scarcely understand, and his purpose in going to Selima, to which he proceeded with 120 men and 125 camels, is quite as obscure as that for the attainment of which he started. Of course, Major Wortley acted under orders from the beginning. No doubt he has encountered many difficulties incident to desert travelling with such a force at this season of the year. No mention is made of Colonel Colville, who started with him, and we presume, therefore, that active and intelligent officer has been left in charge of the force at Beris, whilst Major Wortley pushes on to Selima, but he is credited with the announcement that there are 30,000 "rebels" near Dongola.

The question of railway organisation in a military point of view is exciting a good deal of attention in France. A military writer referring to the subject says that it is interesting to take a glance at antecedents, and he goes back to the days when M. Thiers, after visiting England in 1838, reported against railways as only fit to amuse the Parisians. To come down to a more recent period, the writer mentions that during the Crimean and Italian wars, the railroad was used as little as possible for the transport of troops for fear of rendering them effeminate. Marshal Niel afterwards comprehended the utility of the railway for conveying troops, and appointed a Commission to study the question; he died, was succeeded by Marshal Lebœuf, and the matter was dropped. The result was that in 1870 the French took 22 days to transport 300,000 men to the frontier, while the Germans concentrated all their armies in the Palatinate in half that time. Now matters are very different. In the event of war, all the railways will be requisitioned and placed in the hands of the military authorities; all the goods waggons have been arranged for carrying troops, and at all the stations preparations have been made with the view of getting men and horses quickly in and out of the carriages. About 8,000 miles of national railways remain to be completed, but we see that the lines of strategical importance are to be constructed before the others. France has now about 25,000 miles of railway, and it is calculated that she could mobilise and concentrate her eighteen Army Corps and other troops in twelve days. In addition to the improvements mentioned above for providing celerity of motion, great care has been taken in the creation of a proper military railway corps.

La France Militaire, in reviewing Ubiez's book "La Cavalerie Française en 1884," makes the following comparison:—France: Cavalry, 58,310 horses; Artillery, 29,352; Train, 6,286; total, 93,948. Germany; Cavalry, 69,650 horses; Artillery, 19,440; Train, 2,636; total, 91,726. These figures are not quite correct now, because since 1882 the Artillery Train has been suppressed in France and incorporated with the Artillery. But it is, nevertheless, a fact that the French Cavalry has about 12,000 horses less than that of Germany; whilst the French Artillery and train have 13,000 more horses. This is only an approximate total result. There must be deducted the African Cavalry (with about 8,000 horses), and over 7,000 horses below five years old, which are reckoned in the French regiments; whilst in Germany the horses in remount depôts are not included in the number of Army horses enumerated in the Budget. The result is that the French Cavalry has only about 43,000 horses to the 69,650 horses of the Germans. But not only the number of French Cavalry regiments is less than that of Germany, the units of the French regiments are weaker than the German effective. This disproportion does not exist on paper, and the composition of the effective strength of the German and French regiments is, indeed, only 749 for the former, against 740 horses for the latter. But as the Prussian regiment has in reality only horses over five years old, on the day of mobilisation it can take the field in its full strength, whilst the French regiment must leave at home at least the remounts of the previous year, and can enter the field with only seven-eighths of its effective strength. This explains why in the manœuvres of 1883 most of the regiments could put in an appearance with only 100 horses per squadron, a fact noticed by several military writers, and also by the author of "Is France Ready for War?" As matters stand at present, in an encounter between two divisions each three brigades of two regiments strong, the French cavalry division would attack with 900 sabres less than the German. This circumstance was referred to by M. Demarçay in the French Chamber, when he stated that, if France were compelled under the present system to mobilise, the requisite number of horses would not be forthcoming.

THE ITALIAN ARMY.

Lieutenant Fr. Rhazen, in an article in a recent number of the Jahrbucher, &c., thinks that if the Italians continue to follow the principles laid down in their latest military law, in ten years' time (1894) the effective strength of the Army of the first and second lines and their reserves will be, allowing for deductions, 1,770,175 men,—Infantry, 73·34 of the total strength; cavalry, 5 per cent.; artillery, 19·16 per cent.; engineers, 2·50 per cent.; artillery and engineer train, 5·38 per cent.; sanitary corps and commissariat, 3·62 per cent. The strength of the field artillery is 3·29 guns per 1,000 bayonets. Italy has five army generals (generali d'esercito), 47 lieutenant-generals, 88 major-generals, one physician and one commissary with the rank of major-general; total, 142 generals, besides which there are 10 colonel-brigadiers filling major-generals' charges. The Italian Military Budget for 1884-85 amounts to 241,293,494 lire (about £9,600,000), providing for a peace strength of 12,948 officers, 3,394 officials of the army administration, 219,716 men (including carabinieri), and 40,902 horses. The author concludes his article—which is based on Brusati's work, "Ordinamento degli Eserciti," and which well deserves perusal by those who desire to acquire complete information on the Italian Army—by stating that, with a few years of progress on the lines laid down, the Army of the young kingdom will be thoroughly prepared for war, especially if the new railways planned are rapidly pushed forward, the stores of arms increased, and the development of the Italian Navy is proceeded with.

SOLDIERS' UNCLAIMED BALANCES.

Mr. Preston writes:—"I see by your last issue that the amount of the 'Soldiers' Effects Fund' to be handed over to the Patriotic Fund Commissioners is about £44,500. I venture to suggest that the Royal Warrant authorising such appropriation should give, in an Appendix, the names and descriptions of the soldiers whose next of kin are entitled to sums of £5 or upwards, as notwithstanding such appropriation, persons interested may make good their claims at any time. Section 18 of the Regimental Debts Act, 1863, deals with these 'Unclaimed Balances,' and contains the following proviso:—'Provided that the application of any residue undisposed of or unappropriated as aforesaid shall not be deemed to bar any claim of any person to the same, or any part thereof, that may be established at any time after such application.' It seems a pity that the War Office authorities should not only refuse to print the return as to these 'Unclaimed Balances' obtained by Sir Walter Barttelot, but should ignore the many complaints by soldiers and others on the scant publicity given to the lists of soldiers who have died in the service of the State, leaving money to which their next of kin are entitled."

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Cairo, July 4, 1884.

When writing last week I mentioned the alternate rumours as to the fall and safety of Berber; these have been continued with unflinching regularity, despair prevailing on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, hope on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. The very last is that there is no doubt as to its fall, but this will probably be reversed before I close.

Interest, however, just now centres in Dongola, and on this subject there is the usual element of pleasureable uncertainty which pervades all things Egyptian. Is the said Mudir an heroic patriot or a double-dyed traitor? Here, too, we have the same conflicting evidence, for on three days of the week officials are on the point of weeping at his heroism, hysterically sending him guns, horses, ammunition, and anything he asks for, the other three days they are frantically telegraphing to Wady Halfa and Korosko to get back those arms, horses, and ammunition at any price, and, if possible, to hang the messenger who came for them. Barely are they recovered at the risk of a serious struggle, when there arrives another telegram ordering that all are to be given back again with profuse apologies and the promise of a decoration to the messenger. "It is evident," writes a correspondent at Wady Halfa, "that British policy is in the ascendant at Cairo, and that it is felt as far as this; but whether the result is reassuring may be questioned." "Of this I am sure," says another, "that Zebehr Hussein Halifa and the Mudir of Dongola ought by this time either to have been suspended by ropes or supported by acts—which of the two would have been right I cannot say, but what is quite certain is that doing neither is wrong, and doing one thing one day and the reverse the next is still worse."

Just now, however, the Dongola Mudir is looking up in the world, for he has just won a great victory, and slain as many thousands of his enemies as the telegraph wires are capable of carrying. It may turn out, as in the last victory, that they are chiefly women and children, but still for the moment he scores. The news of these Dongola victories reach us in a humorous fashion,—the Mudir himself generally telegraphs a chapter or two out of the Koran, and ascribes his successes to the same agency as the pious Emperor of Germany.

Then comes, as a sort of Greek chorus, a telegram from some officer or soldier, equally addressed to the authorities, full of nothing but praises of that heroic Mudir. There never was such a man. He has done prodigies of valour with his own arm; but, besides that, the victory has been owing mainly to "his excellent dispositions," which is the invariable and somewhat vague formula employed to describe his strategical genius. And all this from a subordinate officer! It is so genuine and touching! It reminds one irresistibly of Tel-el-Kebir, of Sir Edward Hamley's vigorous protestations that it was he alone, cum grano Garnet, who deserved the whole credit of the action.

Meanwhile, the victory at Debbeh has for the moment completely annihilated the Mahdi and his rebellion! To-morrow, it is true, the Mudir will be in desperate straits, and telegraphing frantically for more troops, till at last Dongola will follow Berber; and the question as to whether it still holds out will continue to keep up the excitement!

The weekly return of the forces in Egypt shows 8,473 men, 213 officers, 950 horses, 642 mules, 20 camels, and 30 guns. From the total of 8,686 officers and men, 679 are in hospital. Four deaths are reported during the week.

THE PROPOSED EXPEDITION TO KHARTOUM.

A train of narrow-gauge trucks and passenger carriages for the proposed railway across the desert between the Red Sea and Berber is in course of shipment at the Royal Arsenal for Suakim. The carriages and trucks were yesterday placed in lighters for conveyance to the Albert Docks, and will this morning be taken on board the British India steamship Navarino, which will sail next Wednesday for the East. The passenger trucks each carry twelve soldiers, and a breaksman on a platform in the rear. They are lightly built, with tilt covers, and are open at the sides, but have stout blinds of oiled canvas on rollers for use if necessary. Although the under carriage is fitted to the narrow-gauge of 18 in., the body of the vehicle is 6 ft. wide, and the seats are balanced over the wheels, like those of an outside car. The goods trucks are longer but not so wide as the passenger carriages, and are more numerous. With them are being sent a further consignment of railway iron, and a large quantity of timber. Meanwhile, the hired steamer Dunluce, just returned from Suakim, is being reloaded with ordnance and commissariat stores, and a considerable freight of medical necessaries. She has drawn from the reserves in the dockyard at Woolwich more than two million pounds of preserved meat and other provisions for the men forming the proposed expedition, together with a supply of compressed forage for the horses. In front of the Ordnance Store office, specimens of the india-rubber tanks which are to be used for holding water in the desert have been set up and fitted for inspection. One kind is completely enclosed as a protection against contamination and evaporation, but the others are open at the top. They are supported by lashings to ordinary picket-posts, and are likely to prove very serviceable in the desert.

REGISTER FOR CIVIL EMPLOYMENT.

The following General Order has been specially issued :—"With a view to assisting men discharged from the Army on the expiration of their engagement, or transferred to the Army Reserve on completion of their term with the colours, in obtaining employment in civil life, it has been decided to keep, at the head-quarters of each regimental district, a Register for Civil Employment. The Register will be commenced on July 1. In it will be entered the names of those whose characters justify their recommendation for such employment, and the nature of the employment they are anxious to obtain ; every assistance will be given them to obtain it in the district in which they may be about to reside :—1. The following to be added at the end of Par. 1., Sec. XXII., 'Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, 1883,' '(g), Register for Civil Employment to be kept at Regimental Depôts (Army Book, 233).' 2. The following will be added after Par. 88.

"REGISTER FOR CIVIL EMPLOYMENT.

"A book shall be kept at the head-quarters of each regimental district by the recruiting officer there, under the supervision of the officer commanding the district. He will be assisted in this by one of the non-commissioned officers specially employed on recruiting duties. In this register shall be entered the names of men of good or fair character discharged on completion of their engagement or transferred to the Army Reserve, who take up their residence in the regimental district, and are desirous of seeking employment through this medium, and whose general conduct while with the colours has given proof of honesty and sobriety. The entry may be made at any time within three months before or immediately succeeding the discharge or transfer. The application of a man serving with the colours to have his name registered will be made through his commanding officer, that of an Army Reserve man and of a discharged soldier direct to the officer commanding the regimental district in which he resides, who will obtain information as to his character, &c., from the officer in charge of his documents. Every non-commissioned officer and man of good or fair character on being passed to the Reserve or discharged from the Army, will be informed, by the officer responsible for the completion of his documents, of this register and its object, and will be asked whether he desires his name to be recorded in it for employment. The contents of par. 89 (f) to be explained to each man. The names of men serving with the colours, or in the Reserve, who wish to be registered will, in the first instance, be entered in a list which is kept in accordance with the annexed form (Appendix, p. 4) ; great care being taken in recording the men's general character, and any special qualifications fitting them for the employment they are desirous of obtaining. This list will be forwarded on the 1st of each month to the officer commanding the regimental district in which the man intends to reside on discharge, or transfer to the Army Reserve. The officer commanding the regimental district, when he has a sufficient number of names on the register, will communicate the fact to such of the large employers of labour in his district as he may think desirable, and will obtain from them any particulars they may be willing to afford with regard to the rules adopted by them as to qualifications, agė, character, pay, provident funds, &c. The information thus obtained, together with the names and addresses of the firms requiring their services, will be supplied, at the discretion of the commanding officer, to the men seeking employment whose names are on the register. Employment having been once found for a man, his name will not be entered again in the register, unless the officer commanding satisfy himself that the man did not leave his place through misconduct. If so re-entered, it will be put at the bottom of the list. It should be clearly understood that the fact of having his name registered does not afford any guarantee that civil employment will be obtained for the man registering his name, the object of the register being merely to establish a means of communication between well-conducted men leaving the service and public companies and other employers of labour who may require their services. The men whose names are entered should be warned that this register is kept entirely for their benefit, and consequently if a man changes his abode he should send his new address to the depôt in whose register his name is entered. If the man obtains employment he should, in like manner, send information thereof. The fact of such a register being kept should be made as public as possible. The success of this scheme, in a great measure, depends upon the manner in which the character of men on their discharge is estimated and recorded. If men recommended as of 'good' character are found to be untrustworthy, or unsteady, the confidence of employers of labour will not be gained, and the scheme must prove a failure. On the other hand, if on account of comparatively trifling irregularities of a purely Military nature men are refused a good character, their subsequent career in civil life is hampered, to the detriment of the popularity of the service and the success of recruiting. The responsibility, therefore, of commanding officers in this respect is very great, and their special attention is directed to the subject."

COMMISSIONS FROM THE RANKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is presumed that only persons serving in the ranks of the Army of unquestionable superiority, and even of them only a limited number, are promoted to commissions. I should, therefore, like to know if the authorities in power have ever contemplated or considered the subject of the grave responsibility they incur, in allowing a wide-spread delusion to prevail that passing through the ranks is an easy way by which gentlemen can enter the Army and rise to the commissioned grades, and that such an idea is a decoy in encouraging young gentlemen of considerable attainments and capacity to enlist ? I am afraid that this step, when taken by young men, sometimes ends in disappointment and vexation; the individual may not have it in him, and however well disposed a commanding officer may be, he cannot, with any justice, bring forward for promotion a soldier whose superiority is not evident to those he passes over to command ; then, again, a gentleman soldier in the ranks may happen not to have had the chance of attaining prominence, and thereby exhibiting his superior mind and character. I have been induced to put forward this word of warning, or at least caution, because one hears now of so many gentlemen enlisting; they are not required for non-commissioned officers, only the best or most fortunate ones that have had a chance of showing their excellence, and not all of them either, can be made officers ; and the life of a soldier in the ranks, should he happen to be without hope or prospect of advancement and restoration to and resumption of the position in society he was brought up to occupy, is by no means enviable. Not that I want to disparage the rank and file of the Army, but what must be the feelings of a young gentleman serving in the ranks of the Army who enlisted with hopes which cannot be fulfilled, especially if circumstances oblige him to complete his Army engagement ?—I am, &c.,

EX-COMMANDING OFFICER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have read your able article, and the letter from "Field Officer," both in your paper of July 12, together with Mr. Cross's answer to Col. Milne-Home, in the House of Commons on July 7, with pleasure, not unmixed with pain,—with pleasure, that the Indian service has found such worthy champions ; with pain, that such a state of things should be allowed. If our sons who are officers are thus treated, and made, against their will, to mistrust the Government, how can we expect our soldiers to believe in the promises of Government ? Mr. Cross cannot deny that the orders complained of, for not being acted up to, were published ; that a promise was made, which was to hold good "in all future orders and references ;" that furlough pay was to be the half-Indian salary, converted at the exchange of 2s. for the rupee. Yet, directly exchange went down, this promise was broken. Would this have been the case if exchange had gone up ? And again, how were officers called upon to elect ? Again, I quote the order, "on the first occasion of their taking leave after the publication of this order." So that all officers who were able to take leave between 1868 and 1871 reap benefits from which those who worked on in India during those years are debarred. In fact, Government were obliged, very reluctantly, to keep their promise to one set of officers, but broke faith with the others. Mr. Cross, in his answer, should have explained these orders more fully, and then the House would have known more of the whole truth of the matter. I was amused at the set-to in the House on July 10 between Mr. Trevelyan, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Mr. O'Brien, and thinking it over in connection with the present case, I deeply regretted that promises generally go for so little nowadays, and are sometimes so easily and unconcernedly broken. On reading the report of Mr. Cross's answer on the exchange question, I could not help wishing that those honourable members who called "hear, hear" at its conclusion had to pay an income-tax of some twenty per cent. during their well-earned holidays. I do not think they then would have been quite so exuberant at the reply. Perhaps, however, they were ignorant of the true state of the case, as many are of many things, I regret to say, particularly those which pertain to Indian affairs. The best thanks of those who have sons in the Indian service are due to Colonel Milne-Home and yourself, for your kindness in bringing this grievance to light ; and with regrets for having trespassed on your valuable space to such a length, I am, &c., PATERFAMILIAS.

The Secretary of State for War has given special permission to the Russian Military Attaché to visit and inspect the military establishments at Chatham.

The Morning Post learns that Lieut.-Gen. Higginson, lately commanding the home district, has been appointed to be the British representative at the Russian autumn manœuvres.

It is announced that Major-Gen. Sir Peter Lumsden, member of the Council of India, has been selected to be British Commissioner for the delimitation of the North-Western boundary of Afghanistan.

PHYSICAL TRAINING IN THE NAVY.

Complaints reach us from many quarters regarding the want of physical training which obtains on board our Naval training-ships. It is asserted that boys are now sent to sea most imperfectly trained and that the ready resource in cases of emergency, which was one of the best characteristics of the British sailor in olden days, is conspicuous by its absence in the lads sent to our sea-going ships from the St. Vincent and the Impregnable. The boys educated at Greenwich must be exempted from this criticism and censure, for they are taught gymnastics and the work of a ship ; and at their recent display, when the prizes where given away, they exhibited very good form in their exercises ; but we cannot say the same for the boys elsewhere. As Captain Charles Johnstone recently remarked at the Royal United Service Institution, boys are turned out of these training-ships like so many bullets from the same mould. They are all alike. Their physical training is so deficient that they are but of little use aloft, and they have seldom the opportunity of improving in the modern battle-ship. They go through a certain course of instruction while under tuition, but the knowledge they gain while under instruction is so meagre, that they are not properly qualified to discharge the duties of a seaman when called upon to do so. In the olden days, when seamanship was everything, and drill aloft of daily occurrence, when passages were made under sail, and ships beat up to their anchorages, or made running moors, and when gales had to be faced and weathered out, our young seamen had every opportunity of improving upon the training they had received in the home ports, But, nowadays, things have altered. Ships are mastless. Therein lies the secret of the deterioration of the British man-of-war's man. In Sweden the fact has long been recognised, and a system of calisthenics has been adopted to impart to the sailor that which he formerly learnt at sea. The gymnastic training of the Swede, in every walk of life, is the most perfect in the world. It is known as the Ling system of calisthenics, and has recently been adopted by the London School Board as a means to develop the physical training of the children under its tuition. A Swedish gymnasium, similar to the one exhibited by Mr. Thorsten Nordenfelt at the Health Exhibition at South Kensington, has been erected by the Board at its Crampton Street School, and was opened last Wednesday, when Captain Haasum, of the 2nd Swedish Guards, lent by the King of Sweden to the London School Board for the purpose of introducing the Ling system of calisthenics into this country, proved its value as an adjunct to the national education, by giving illustrations of the use of the gymnastic apparatus there set up. He also put a squad of School-board children through their drill, and clearly demonstrated the value of this system of physical training. In Stockholm and all Swedish naval ports, similar gymnasia exist for the use of the Navy, the Swedish Admiralty having long since recognised the necessity of supplementing the ordinary course of training undergone by recruits for the Navy, now that battle-ships are mastless. Something of the sort should be done in this country, and before Captain Haasum returns to his duty with his regiment the opportunity should be seized to start gymnasia in Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Sheerness Dockyards, and to instruct a competent staff in the use of the various appliances devised by Professor Ling for the development of the muscles. Those who witnessed the performance of the Swedish officers and members of the Royal Swedish Gymnastic Club in this country four years ago, will remember how full of ready resource every member of Captain Balk's party was, thanks to the training he had undergone in the Ling system of calisthenics. Since then, Colonel Cleather has visited Sweden with the English Military Gymnastic Staff under his command ; and on his return to this country he and other officers of his Staff made reports on what they had seen in the various Swedish Naval, Military, and civilian gymnasia. These reports were forwarded by the Duke of Cambridge to the Home Office. Mr. Mundella at once placed himself in communication with the Council on Education. The London School Board and Mr. Nordenfelt were consulted, and, as a result, the Crampton Street Ling Gymnasia and the one exhibited at the Health Exhibition were constructed. At the latter may now be seen, twice a week, a squad of London School-Board children, neatly clothed in suits provided for them by the generosity of Mr. Nordenfelt, going through the rudiments of the Ling system of calisthenics, the boys under Captain Haasum, the girls under Miss Bergman ; and we feel convinced that all who witness these children at work, and see how invigorating and useful the exercise is, will admit the work should be carried into every town and village of the country, and especially among those lads being trained for the Navy, who, by common consent of all officers who have to deal with them afloat, are at present deficient in that training which in the olden days imparted to our seamen that readiness of resource which made them so useful, both ashore and afloat.

Service Questions in Parliament.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday, Mr. Gibson asked whether the Government had yet heard whether Gen. Gordon had received either of the Government despatches of April 23 or May 18; had the Government recently made any efforts to communicate with Gen. Gordon; what was the date of the last despatch sent to Gen. Gordon, and of the last despatch received from him; and what was the present position of Gen. Gordon? Lord E. Fitzmaurice pointed out that the last despatch to Gen. Gordon was dated from London, May 17, while that received from him bore date April 10. The Government have not heard whether Gen. Gordon has received the despatches referred to.

In reply to Sir J. Hay, the Marquis of Hartington stated that the gratuity has already been issued to the troops employed in the operations around Suakim.

Mr. Chaplin asked the Secretary of State for War on Thursday whether he could state to the House the total number of her Majesty's troops now serving in Egypt; whether her Majesty's Government had recently had under their consideration the making of any addition to those forces; and whether the Government had any intention, having regard to the increasingly grave position of affairs in that country, of sending any reinforcements to Egypt. He wished to supplement the question by two other points, of which he had given private notice. In the first place, he wished to know whether it was true that her Majesty's Government had received any communication on the subject of the forces from the military authorities at Cairo; and, secondly, whether the Government had come to any decision as to the sending of an expedition to the Soudan in the autumn for the relief of General Gordon. The Marquis of Hartington said:—My answer will include a reply to the first of the hon. member's supplementary questions. As to the second, it will not be possible for me to add anything to my reply to the hon. Member for Eye. It would not, I think, be desirable to publish the exact amount of the force in Egypt, but there are at present there one regiment of cavalry, one horse, one field, and three garrison batteries of Artillery, two companies of Engineers, and eight and a half battalions of infantry, with the necessary proportion of administrative corps. With reference to the remainder of the hon. gentleman's question, and also to the questions which stand in the names of the noble lord the Member for West Essex and the hon. baronet the Member for Wigtownshire, Sir Frederick Stephenson has asked for a reinforcement of one battalion, but he makes the demand more as a matter of precaution than of actual urgency. The Government, having given full consideration to the matter, have decided to send a battalion of infantry, now at Malta, on to Egypt. Another battalion, in the Mediterranean, will also be held in readiness to proceed immediately if its services should be required. With regard to a Supplementary Estimate or Vote of Credit, I stated the other day that I am obtaining information as to the extraordinary expenditure which has been or is likely to be incurred in Egypt; and when I have obtained it, I will, in consultation with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, consider whether a Supplementary Estimate will be required. Sir H. Wolff: Will the whole expenditure of these troops be borne by this country or by Egypt? The Marquis of Hartington: So far as I am aware, the arrangement formerly concluded with the Egyptian Government will hold good by which a capitation grant is given. Sir S. Northcote: Does the right hon. gentleman intend to move a supplementary estimate in the present session? The Marquis of Hartington: Some extraordinary expenditure has been incurred, and some more will have to be incurred, and as soon as I ascertain what the amount is likely to be I will communicate with my right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and see whether it will be necessary to present a supplementary estimate in the present session.

Replying to Sir J. Hay, the Marquis of Hartington said: A hydro-pneumatic gun carriage for permanent works on the Moncrieff principle is under trial. The results as yet are not satisfactory, and no decision, therefore, as to the adoption of the system has been arrived at.

In reply to Mr. J. Lowther, Lord E. Fitzmaurice stated that the Government had received no information in regard to General Gordon beyond what had been already communicated to the House.

WHY SHOULD THE NAVY WAIT?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Is no gratuity to be granted, or medals given, to the Navy for their services in the Soudan expedition? The Army has already received the gratuity (vide Lord Hartington's reply to Sir John Hay on the 15th inst.), and in one case, the 10th Hussars, has had the medal presented, but not a word has been said about the Navy participating in these honours! Why should the Navy wait?—I am, &c.,

Active Service cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with Rowland's Odonto, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowland's Odonto has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for Rowland's Odonto, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

Corpl. J. Keogh, 8th Division, Coast Brigade, has been awarded a testimonial on vellum by the Royal Humane Society for having saved the life of Isabella Beale, a child, who was in danger of being drowned near the Pigeon House Fort on April 29 last.

Vet.-Surgs. Gillespie and Bostock have arrived at Aldershot for duty, and Lieut. the Hon. G. A. Anson has also been ordered to Aldershot.

The Portsmouth Times says:—"I Baty. 1st Brig. London Division (Major Auchinleck), stationed at Gunwharf Barracks, are under orders to hold themselves in readiness for foreign service. Being the first battery on the roster for embarkation, it is understood that the destination will be Egypt."

A correspondent writes:—"On what principle are field batteries given to those officers who by recent regulation are debarred from obtaining them? Of the batch commissioned in October, 1882, six have been given field batteries, the first because it has been customary to give the first one, but why the others? The regulation I refer to is Royal Artillery Regimental Order 85, of November, 1883. The regulation referred to says that the cases of those officers whose names had already been recommended would be considered; but by a previous regulation the names of officers under two years' service could not be recommended. These officers not having yet two years' service cannot have got their field batteries on the latter plea."

At the Sheerness Police-court, on Thursday, Gunner John Eastwood was brought up on remand on the charge of wilfully murdering Qrmr.-Serjt. R. G. Hunter at Sheerness on the 9th inst. Mr. Copland defended the prisoner. Serjt. Ashley stated that he had known the prisoner since 1872, and had served with him for many years in India. In 1872, at Aden, the prisoner was subject to epileptic fits, and in 1876, when stationed at Colaba, Bombay, he took a carbine and threatened to shoot himself. Serjt. Duncan deposed that the prisoner behaved very strangely when he was stationed with him in India. The prisoner was further remanded.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major-Gen. W. O. Lennox has been appointed to command a brigade in Egypt.

Col. W. C. Phillpott is appointed a Col. on the Staff commanding the R.E. at Malta.

Lieut. Tuke, accompanied by five sappers and one interpreter, left Cairo on Tuesday for Keneh.

The Times says:—"The non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Engineers, who are engaged at Dover and at other places on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway system in preparing themselves, prior to leaving England, to construct the Suakim-Berber Railway, now number upwards of 150 men. The majority are engaged in platelaying; others are working on the main-line engines, and are being taught the work of shunting, making up trains, &c."

The Times' Cairo correspondent telegraphs:—"A report received from the Mudir of Kassala states that Gen. Gordon was safe at Khartoum on April 27. He had repulsed the rebels to the east and west of the town."

The Portsmouth Times says:—"The telegraph battalion, under the command of Capt. Jelf, completed the line of telegraphs which now extend from Windsor to Portsmouth on their march down, the section now at Portsmouth taking up the work at a point some distance this side of Woolmer, and on Friday they established a line at Hilsea. The section will remain at Portsmouth till joined by the remainder of the battalion, and will then proceed to Suakim. The first division of the battalion consists of 177 officers and men and 65 horses, and the second division, which is not mounted, consists of 161 officers and men."

Coldstream Guards. The annual change of quarters of the 1st Batn. took place on Tuesday, when the battalion left Chelsea Barracks and marched to Wellington Barracks, where it will be quartered in the wing vacated by the Grenadiers.

Scots Guards. The 1st Batn. returned to London on Tuesday from Aldershot, and took over quarters at Chelsea Barracks. The battalion held their annual athletic sports last week at Aldershot. The sports were never for a moment allowed to flag, and the interest was maintained from first to last. Lieut. Baden-Powell's balloon was inflated and in captivity on the ground; several ascents were made by Mr. Powell, accompanied by numerous officers. Mr. Powell extended this privilege to a number of non-commissioned officers and men, and during one ascent the pipes were played in mid-air. The balloon caused a great amount of amusement to many of those present.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Capt. Holmes, 1st Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Lennox, commanding a brigade in Egypt.

4th King's Own (Royal Lancaster Regiment). Lieut. Mosse, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Bombay S.C. Lieut. Scott, 2nd Batn., has been appointed staff officer at the Purundhur Sanitarium, Bombay.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. The 1st Batn. arrived at Keneh on July 2, en route for Assouan. The health of the troops is excellent. Those men of the battalion attached to the Royal Highlanders at Cairo, proceeded up country on July 3, with the Duke of Cornwall's, to rejoin their battalion at Assouan.

37th Hampshire Regiment, stationed at Gosport, received orders on Thursday to leave Portsmouth on Sunday for Malta, to relieve the 1st Batn. 19th Yorkshire Regt., ordered to Egypt.

39th Dorset Regiment. Capt. Percy has been selected for the adjutancy of the 3rd Batn., from Sept. 19.

41st Welsh Regiment. Major Quirk, whose services were recently placed at the disposal of the Egyptian Government, has been selected to act as Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. of the local force, vice Col. Slade.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Capt. Maxwell has been appointed Acting-Assist. Provost-Marshal in Egypt. Lieut. Souter, 1st Batn., proceeded by the Elpitha to Cyprus, having been appointed to the command of the Convalescents' Depôt, which is largely used by the troops in Egypt. He was accompanied by Surg. Irvine of the Army Medical Department, and a detachment of the Army Hospital Corps, in charge of 47 convalescents of the Army of Occupation.

44th Essex Regiment. Lieut. Merewether is a candidate for the Bombay S.C.

49th Princess Charlotte of Wales's Regiment. "An Old Officer" writes:—"By the retirement on pension of Lieut.-Col. Gavegan, the 49th have lost a kind and gallant officer. Col. Gavegan on his retirement was the last of the Crimean heroes left in the regiment. He served with distinction in the Russian War of 1854, where he was dangerously wounded. He received the war medal with clasps for Alma, Inkermann, and Sevastopol, and the Turkish war medal. He also served in Egypt, 1882, and obtained the Egyptian medal and Khedive's star. A better soldier and more thoroughly upright and genial comrade never wore the uniform of the regiment, and his loss will be regretted by all ranks."

56th Essex Regiment. Lieut.-Col. White is in temporary command of a Brigade in Egypt.

62nd Wiltshire Regiment. Capt. Hobbs has been examined for promotion, and found qualified.

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. The Portsmouth Times says:—"Owing to the depleted condition of the Seaforth Highlanders, at Parkhurst, it was recently suggested that they should rejoin the depôt, and await the enrolment of further recruits. Since then, the battalion has been joined by 100 young soldiers from Perth, and on Tuesday the battalion, thus strengthened, was inspected by Sir G. Willis, general commanding the district."

73rd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Lieut. Owen, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 26th Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C., from Feb. 27, 1882.

MILITIA.

Middlesex Regiment. The 3rd Batn. was inspected at Aldershot by Major-Gen. Hon. W. H. A. Feilding, commanding the 3rd Infantry Brig., on Tuesday and Friday, the 8th and 11th inst. The total strength is about 874, including recruits at Hounslow, and of that number there were present under arms 488 men and 22 officers. The officers on parade were Majors Blunt (in command) and Batley (hon. lieut.-col.); Capts. Baylis, Duff, Howe, Gant, Winter (Major), Moore, and Ricketts; Lieuts. Lamb, Fox, Taylor, Fox, Sutton, Batten, Walsh, Coombes, Burt, and Nunn. Gen. Fielding at the close of the inspection said he was pleased at their turn-out, and congratulated Major Blunt on commanding so fine and well-behaved a regiment.

The 3rd Royal Fusiliers will proceed from Aldershot this day to Hounslow, for disembodiment.

The 4th East Surrey is now training at Aldershot, and will leave on the 9th prox.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The School of Instruction for Officers of the Auxiliary Forces (Infantry) will reopen next month at Aldershot.

The following letter appeared in the Standard of the 14th inst. "Hard Hit's" statements, if borne out by facts, as no doubt they are, furnish conclusive evidence of the real reason which debars gentlemen of the proper social status from accepting Volunteer commissions:—"Sir,—In March last the Brigade of Volunteer Artillery to which I belong was ordered to occupy one of the largest of our Southern Forts from Wednesday, April 9, to Wednesday, April 16. Arrangements were made with the Railway Company, which had tickets printed and issued for conveyance, and contracts were entered into with caterers for the supply of rations for 600 men and officers. The advance party and staff were detailed to start by a certain train on the Wednesday, and all the countless details necessary for such an undertaking were arranged. On Tuesday, April 8 (24 hours before the occupation of the Fort), an official communication was received that as the sum for camp allowances had been under-estimated by the Government officials, we could not receive the full sum we should be entitled to, and specifying a maximum sum to be allowed to us, which did not amount to half what we are entitled to according to the official printed Regulations of the Volunteer service (see Section XXVII., para. 919). Too late to withdraw from the engagements we had entered into, what could our colonel do but go, and trust that when the exceptional circumstances of our case were explained, the authorities would in simple justice satisfy our claim. Will it be believed, sir, that the authorities refused to listen to our appeal, and have literally fined the officers of the brigade nearly £120 for carrying out the instructions received from the War Office—I say advisedly 'fined the officers,' for our brigade funds are too heavily taxed already, and the deficit must come from the pockets of the officers. Comment is needless. What would be thought of any business firm which should so repudiate its engagements? If the Volunteer Force is wanted, why is it starved, and officers made to work hard, and find funds as well, for the carelessness or stupidity of Government officials? What wonder that the dearth of officers is beginning to awake attention."

LANDING SICK OFFICERS IN THE ORKNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In your issue of July 12, I notice some very misleading statements by a correspondent concerning the suitability of this town as a sick-station. His remarks show the most crass ignorance of the place and all its medical belongings. I trust in fairness you will permit me to furnish a few lines of accurate detail. Kirkwall is a cathedral town of some 5,000 inhabitants. Medically it possesses seven doctors, three being University graduates. There is an ordinary hospital which contains fourteen beds, conjoined with a fever hospital, with accommodation for ten patients. There are in addition a small-pox hospital with six beds, and a workhouse hospital. When I state the food of the sick officers consists of beef-tea, chicken soup, mutton broth, animal jellies, milk, corn-flour, sago, ice, &c., surely you will admit there is not much to complain of. Each officer has also his marine servant to attend on him, and keeping in the same wards. Indeed, one of the officers told me to-day he never saw equal accommodation or comfort in any Naval hospital; while a retired major of cavalry stated the same yesterday of military hospitals.—I am, &c.,

John Bruce, M.B., Surgeon and Agent.

Kirkwall, July 12.

While the Hyacinth was subjecting her guns to the usual trial last Saturday in the Channel, prior to being commissioned to relieve the Espiègle on the Australian station, a serious accident occurred, whereby Lieut. Finnis, of the Cambridge, well-nigh lost an arm. The Hyacinth was firing her guns in a heavy sea outside the breakwater off Plymouth, when Lieut. Finnis proceeded to inspect the working of the spare traversing of the forecastle gun. The ship was rolling heavily, and the gun took charge at a time when Lieut. Finnis was between the gun and the post. The gun luckily missed his body, but jambed his left arm between its muzzle and the side of the port or embrasure, fearfully lacerating the flesh. Dr. Lilly was immediately in attendance, and succeeded in stopping the hæmorrhage and in dressing the wound. Lieut. Finnis is, we are glad to hear, progressing favourably.

Notice is given by the Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, that preparations are now being made for the intended distribution of the slave and tonnage bounties awarded for the British schooner Gazelle, and the slave-dhow Simba, captured on November 28, 1882, and April 2, 1883, by the Harrier, and for the native vessel Fath-el-Kheir, and dhow Maile and 103 slaves captured on March 6 and May 6, 1883, by the Undine. Due notice will be given of the date proposed for the commencement of distribution; also the amount of an individual's share in the respective classes.

FROM the moment direct telegraphic communication with Khartoum ceased, the enthusiasm and furore about Gordon began to wane. It is very strange and illogical, but it is true, that the moment grounds for apprehension were furnished by the cessation of direct intercourse with Khartoum, the public and Parliament seemed to think he must be all right. The Press grew languid—apathetic—silent. Honourable Members generally did the same. Now there is, apparently, a recrudescence of the excitement; and well there may be, for it is three months since there was any trustworthy direct intelligence from Khartoum, and there are disquieting rumours, as well as rosy reports, as to which one may choose, without any reason, as he pleases, the best or the worst. There is an uneasy feeling manifested by the civilian Press that they have been acting in but a paltry fashion about the position of General Gordon. Some papers used the situation for purely party purposes. "Gordon" was a good stick to lay on the shoulders of the Government. Others, again, resorted to his mission and its incidents as a channel through which to direct streams of invective against their pet aversion,—the Prime Minister. There were some who insisted that Gordon should be made Sultan somewhere,—whether of a slave kingdom or not did not signify; others professed to believe he would smash up the Mahdi by the power of the Sword of Gideon, and so on. But, one way or the other, there was a concensus of clamour about "Gordon," and a stern determination expressed every morning and every evening in the leaders, and echoed at question-time in the questions of Members of both Houses of Parliament, that "Gordon must be rescued." The Government preserved a mysterious air under the fusillade of leaders and inquiries, and refused to say whether they would rescue him or not. They would not make any statement as to their intentions with respect to the hero of the—several—say 100—days. Neither Punch's cartoons, nor the fervid pressure of religious bodies, nor political considerations, appeared to affect their divine calm; but they let it leak out at last that the makings of a railway were being sent to Suakim. Then Sir W. Hewett was despatched to Abyssinia, on the almost incredible errand of making an arrangement with the arrogant and ferocious savage who rules that country to let loose his bloody hordes on the unfortunate population between the Nile and his western frontier. This is to be done,—or was contemplated,—in order that the garrisons of Kassala and other posts, not in much danger, might be liberated at a terrible price; for Egypt, without the smallest shadow of justification, is ordered to surrender rights and territory by the British Government, because Mr. Gladstone thinks fit to employ the ex-Prince of Tigre to do our work. Our usually sober-minded contemporary, the Globe, has three or four "King Charles' heads" in his closet, which always "set him off" on an erratic departure from the beaten paths of decorous "mediocrity of sentiment." Three of these are certain in their effect, viz., "the Boers," "the French," and "the Mudir of Dongola." "Heaven and Earth! Three such names mingled!" But so it is. The Globe was glorious last week. The Mudir of Dongola has been found out. Joseph Franco has proved it. That being so, and the Mudir having gone over to the Mahdi, and Berber having fallen, Gordon has no route open for his retreat. It is really quite refreshing to come upon a reminiscence of Gordon, who has dropped clean out of Press, Parliament, print, and popular subjects for some weeks past. We are almost inclined to thank the Mudir of Dongola for enabling the Globe to deplore Gordon's isolation once more. There is a distressing indifference to dates in the "news" telegraphed by the active correspondents of the London papers from Egypt. The Standard's report from Cairo of Thursday is void for uncertainty. "Pilgrims arrived at Suakim." When? They "occupied 27 days in their journey from Khartoum." When did they leave it? Any way, we hope the report that Gordon is well, will turn out to be true. Even yesterday it was not known whether Berber had fallen or not, nor was it possible to determine whether Dongola was held for or against the Khedive.

The Levée held on Monday was remarkable for the number of Soudan officers who were present. The 10th Hussars sent up 17 of their officers from Shorncliffe, of whom 14 had taken part in the campaigns; the Colonels of the 65th and 87th, with their recently invested Companionships of the Bath, were present; and the Navy contributed Captain Rolfe, C.B., and Commander Graham, late of the Euryalus.

Baker Pasha was present as a spectator at the review at Aldershot on Thursday before the Duke of Cambridge. This was his first visit to Aldershot since he vacated the appointment of Assistant-Quartermaster-General of the Division in August, 1875. It is needless to say that he was received most cordially on all hands.

Experiments are about to be carried out with an electric-apparatus waggon, which is intended to assist ambulance work at night.

Major-General Lennox, who has been selected for a brigade command in Egypt, left Gravesend for Alexandria on Thursday. General Lennox is the senior of the four officers of his rank who are borne on the Staff of the Army in Egypt. Major-General Earle, lately in command of the garrison at Alexandria and now at home on leave, will, we believe, as at present arranged, return in September.

A special memorandum has been circulated at Aldershot on the subject of transport during manœuvres, field-days, &c., it having been found that transport vehicles attached to brigades and regiments during operations are often miles away when wanted. It is pointed out that the ambulances, water-carts, and ammunition-carts which accompany troops to field-days at Aldershot are intended to represent the transport carriages that accompany troops in war, and that every effort should be made to utilise them accordingly. On the march they should closely follow brigades, or any other force which they are detailed to accompany. During an action they should be kept in some central position in rear of the troops to which they belong, as much as possible out of fire, and yet available for use when required. The ambulances and water-carts should be accompanied by medical officers who have control over them. The ammunition-carts should be accompanied by non-commissioned officers of the battalion to which they are for the time attached, and every arrangement (including the provision of the ammunition-bags) should be made beforehand to facilitate the issue of the blank ammunition which the carts are ordered to take. In marching-past, on the conclusion of the operations, the transport should march-past in one line in rear of the brigade or force to which it is attached.

The attempt which has been made to establish regimental coffee-shops in connection with canteens at Aldershot has not proved successful. But in several instances, we believe, these establishments have been conducted so as to ensure their unpopularity among the rank and file, and consequent failure.

The number of appointments to be made at the examination in the Army Medical Department to be held in August has been increased from nineteen to thirty.

What has become of Sir J. Hay's vote of thanks to Sir G. Graham's force for their services in the Soudan? First it was announced that the gallant Admiral would move proprio motu, as the Government would not propose the thanks of Parliament to the sailors and soldiers that they should receive the usual acknowledgment for gallant service,—then that he would postpone it till there was a vote on the Supplementary Estimates, —now these may be deferred till the Greek Kalends, for the gratuity has been paid. However, as Lord Hartington has given an intimation that there may be a Supply Estimate soon, Sir John Hay will have a chance, after all, of taking the sense of the House on the matter.

Very funny, these newspapers! Especially the high-falutin', spasmodic Radical! "It will be a great help for us," says the Pall Mall Gazette, which is haud facile princeps among them in the 'Erkles vein, "if General Gordon can hold Khartoum for England all through the summer!" "Help for us to do what?" And why "Khartoum for England?" These be wonderful babblements!

Applications for permission to attend the examination for admission to the Staff College must in future reach the Adjutant-General before April 1.

The field-firing practices of Infantry regiments in September next will be conducted on a new system. The men will first be exercised carefully by companies, then by half-battalions and battalions, and, finally, by brigades. Much better results are expected than have been obtained hitherto.

It is proposed to give a pair of light waterproof canvas shoes to each soldier in addition to his ammunition boots (as proposed by Sir Thomas Steele's Equipment Committee, in 1869), and at the same time to issue but three pairs of boots biennially, instead of two pairs annually as heretofore. The issue of these slippers or shoes will be anything but a boon to the soldier. Two pairs of boots per annum are not more than sufficient for the average-duty soldier, who, at Aldershot, for instance, can easily wear out a pair of good soles in six weeks in dry weather, and few of these boots will stand repairing more than twice. Commanding officers have been called upon to give their opinions on this subject, and there can be no doubt of the result.

The names of all officers commanding companies who have not obtained certificates of proficiency in musketry instruction, have been forwarded to Army Head-quarters.

In consequence of an increased demand for officers of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, there will be three examinations for admission to the Royal Military Academy, in 1885, instead of two. These examinations will be held in the months of April, July, and December. The following alterations will be made in the terms at the Royal Military Academy up to February, 1886:—1884. 1st term, March 14 to July 4; 2nd, August 20 to December 9. 1885. 1st term, January 7 to April 28; 2nd, May 27 to September 16; 3rd, October 21 to February 16, 1886. Candidates for examination in April, 1885, must be within the regulated limits of age on the 1st of that month, and should forward to the Military Secretary, not later than February 15 next, their applications to be allowed to compete, accompanied by the papers required by Para. 5 of the Regulations issued with G.O. 77 of 1880.

For some mysterious reason, the Gazettes which now record the most minor appointments to the Staff, do not give the districts to which officers are appointed. Thus, Major St. Clair, 91st Highlanders, who replaces Major Hutton as Brigade-Major to the 1st Infantry Brigade at Aldershot, is simply gazetted to be a Brigade-Major, and Major Jones, R.A., who succeeds Lieutenant-Colonel Graham at Shorncliffe, appears in the Gazette as a Garrison Instructor on the Staff, in company with Captain Marshall, 20th Fusiliers. It would be divulging no official secret to state that the last-named officer replaces Major Milner at Halifax, and that Major Jones goes to Shorncliffe, and we therefore fail to see why the Gazette does not record the fact. In the interests of the non-military readers of that fearful and wonderful publication, we trust that this will be seen to in future announcements.

A new "plan of attack" has, it is said, been originated by Lord Wolseley and Major-General Newdigate.

A correspondent, on whom we can entirely depend, sends us a statement bearing on the complaints we inserted last week in reference to the measure of generosity and justice displayed by the Admiralty in their treatment of the late John Sullivan, which satisfies us that the authorities were generous and more than just in their conduct.

It is interesting to reproduce the words in which Dr. Schweinfurth, whose earnest appeal for the rescue of our captain and his host in Khartoum has made such a sensation and stir in the country, wrote of him not long ago:—"Gordon, I think, is essentially a hero in the poetic sense. In this way he resembles Garibaldi, who also was rather a man of action and courage than of patience and judgment. Gordon is capricious. One day he is condescending, affable, and cordial; another he storms at everybody, is rough, crusty, and unapproachable. A man who was yesterday taken into his confidence will to-day be given an important post, and to-morrow be dismissed. His plans are changed even during their execution, and his actions only proceed in a straight line when they are carried along by his enthusiasm. Once arrest them, and they upset like a velocipede. A man like this would be much more capable of crushing the Mahdi than of reconstructing in five years what he had destroyed in five days."

Major Barrow, 26th Cameronians, who lately returned from Egypt, where he was employed in drilling the Gendarmerie, has been selected for duty with the Mounted Infantry, and will leave England at once.

The Engineers are in favour at last. Uno avulso non deficit alter. Sir G. Graham promoted Lieutenant-General and made K.C.B. for his eminent services, is to be kept at home and is not to return to Egypt, but an old Crimean comrade, General W. O. Lennox, also a V.C., and a soldier of great experience and varied service in India, China, &c., has been selected as his successor, and has been approved of by the Queen.

It is believed that the trials which have been carried out lately to test the advantages of the system of horse-picketing, as adopted by the Italian Army, have not proved so successful as to justify a favourable report.

Recent Gazettes have afforded some remarkable instances of rapid promotion, but we have to go back many years to find any record of an advancement so quick as that of Captain Fanshawe, 19th Hussars, who was last week gazetted to his troop just two years after his appointment to his first commission. Promotion has been wonderfully rapid in the 19th Hussars of late, as already instanced in the case of Captain Ker Fox, and no injustice has, therefore, been done to the regiment by the appointment of the senior subaltern of the 4th Dragoon Guards to one of the vacant troops. As showing the luck that necessarily accompanies all promotion in the service, we may point out that Captain Fanshawe's elder brother took over eight years in getting his captaincy in the 97th Regiment.

When practicable, each company will in future undergo a course of field-work instruction, under an Engineer officer. This instruction will be carried out before, and independent of, the military training, which will be reduced by one week for this purpose.

The results of the efforts of the Opposition to obtain information from her Majesty's Government respecting affairs in the Soudan and Gordon's position are simply null, if not void, owing to the very nature of things. Ex nihilo nihil fit. All that we know is that nothing can be known. "Story! God bless you! I have none to tell, sir," and so on. But from Kassala comes a cheering rumour, or it may be a positive report, that three months ago Gordon was safe in Khartoum, and that he had repulsed the enemy to the east and west of the town; in other words, he had driven away for a time the vagabond Arabs within reach of his guns on the banks of the rivers. The situation certainly is not brightening in any way, and the demand of General Stephenson for three battalions of troops to take the place of those which have been despatched southwards towards Assouan will put the Quartermastering and Adjutant-Generalcy in Pall Mall to the pin of their collar. If to this demand be added the request made in the Times of Wednesday for the despatch of the British expedition to Khartoum, which our contemporary thinks necessary to extricate Gordon, it will be admitted that the stress placed upon our military establishment will not be inconsiderable. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof.

DARING, Com. Ching, while at Hong Kong lost Joseph Northmore, a private of Marines, and William Jones, an able seaman, killed accidentally. The Daring was engaged in gun practice, and prizes were given for the quickest and smartest at firing. One round had just been fired from the gun, and the two men were in the act of ramming home the projectile for the next round, when the charge exploded. Both Northmore and Jones were standing directly in front of the gun, and were killed instantly. Northmore was blown clean through the port-hole, and although a boat was lowered at once, nothing could be found of his remains. Jones's body was found lying in the port-hole frightfully burnt and mangled. He was buried next day with full Naval honours. A court of inquiry has been held into the cause of the explosion, and it is thought the accident was due to faulty sponging, for which the unfortunate men were themselves responsible.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Portland, Thursday, July 10.

The Squadron remains at Portland, and nothing has, as yet, been given out definitely as to our future movements. The flotilla of 1st-class torpedo-boats, eight in number (another one having come round from Portsmouth), is still here; they get under weigh nearly every day, and go out for steam tactics, full-speed trials, or torpedo exercise. Each ship has drawn a 2nd-class torpedo-boat from the Hecla; these, and also the ship's own steam pinnaces, have been exercised at steam tactics. The annual prize-firing of the Squadron is about to be carried out; the ships are going outside one at a time for this purpose; the Minotaur has been out to-day, and the others will follow in succession. The Valorous, which arrived on Monday from Portsmouth, brought with her a large target of a new pattern to be used for the prize-firing; it consists of a raft with three masts, was brought round in pieces, and has been put together by the carpenters of the Squadron. Yesterday the Seahorse towed the target outside, and moved it in position; she also laid down buoys, as points for the ships to turn on, while steaming backwards and forwards past it. General leave, which has been given to the men, expired on Monday; while it was going on, the ships had a slight refit, painted, &c. As soon as the men returned, drills, &c., were resumed. We had "ram-on" and general quarters on Tuesday, and out stream anchors and cables yesterday; parties are also on shore at the range, going through their annual musketry course, and the quarterly short practice is being carried out. Last Friday evening, the officers of the Achilles repeated the performance of "Fra Diavolo," which they had previously given at Berehaven; the Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied by his young son, Prince Alfred, was present, and the whole passed off, as on the former occasion, with the utmost success. All the captains and a large number of officers of the Squadron attended the levée held by the Prince of Wales last Monday; they assembled at Clarence House, where they were entertained at lunch by the Duke of Edinburgh, and afterwards went over to the levée together. The members of the Weymouth and County Club have, with their usual kindness, made us honorary members of their club.

Portland, Thursday, July 17.

The last few days have been devoted principally to prize-firing and coaling. The Minotaur and Neptune finished their coaling last week. The Sultan went out and completed hers on Monday, the Agincourt on Tuesday, the Northumberland on Wednesday, and the Achilles is to follow to-morrow. The Seahorse tows the target out every morning, secures it to the moorings which have been laid down, and brings it back in the evening after the firing for repairs. Each ship has coaled the day after firing. Several experimental night attacks have been made on the Squadron by the 1st-class torpedo-boats. On each occasion a report has been sent in by every ship the next morning, as to everything concerning the torpedo-boats that had been observed. Last night the electric lights were used, searching for the attacking boats, each ship working independently. To-night they are to be used again, but more systematically, as each ship has been given an arc of bearing to sweep and keep a look-out on. The 1st-class boats have been kept pretty busy, as, besides their night work, they have been frequently under weigh, exercising at steam tactics and firing Whiteheads. Last Friday the Duke took them out and exercised them himself. The 2nd-class boats, one of which each ship has drawn from the Hecla, have also been kept going at tactics and Whitehead torpedo exercise. Yesterday the ships that were not firing or coaling got out sheet anchors and sent them alongside the flagship. The Duke of Edinburgh went up to town for the levée which was held last Monday; Admiral Whyte and a number of officers of the Squadron attended it. There was a very pleasant afternoon dance on board the Boscawen last Thursday, the early part of the day was rainy, but it cleared up just in time, and everything went off most successfully; the ship's band, composed entirely of boys, was particularly good. The Minotaur's athletic sports, which had been postponed on account of the weather at Bantry, took place this afternoon in the Boscawen's recreation ground at Portland; the weather was perfect and the meeting was a great success. The Duke of Edinburgh and a large number of officers of the Squadron were present, besides a good many visitors from Weymouth, and at the conclusion, the prizes were distributed by young Prince Alfred.

THE RESERVE SQUADRON.

Blacksod Bay, County Mayo, July 15, 1884.

The appellation of this place did not, I must confess, tend to impress us very favourably with it when we learned it was to form one of our ports of call during this annual cruise. The expectation, however, was nothing as compared with the reality, and one is compelled to live in a constant atmosphere of loud and incessant growls, accompanied by bewilderment and wonder at the object of the Admiralty in sending us hither. We took our departure from Stornoway on the afternoon of the 9th inst., the Shannon proceeding concurrently to one of the other islands of the Hebrides, from which she rejoined the flag here on Sunday. Shortly after leaving the harbour sail was made to a favourable breeze, an evolution in which the Valiant was conspicuously first, and which elicited a complimentary signal from the Admiral. Her smartness on this occasion was all the more apparent on account of the extreme slackness with which the other ships of the Squadron carried out this operation. The whole of the following forenoon was devoted to general quarters, and the afternoon to steam tactics. It seems a pity that the Squadron is not to be more at sea during its six weeks' cruise, as the amount of fleet manœuvring which has taken place up to the present has been infinitesimal, and does not appear to have had any effect whatever in improving the station maintained by some of the ships. Although we left Stornoway one day late of our programme, the Admiral determined to make it up in the passage hither, and accordingly soon after daylight in the morning of the 11th, the signal was made from the Hercules that the Admiral intended proceeding at a speed of seven knots, so as to reach Blacksod that evening. As we had six days to get through there, this determination to press on did not elicit any great amount of enthusiasm, and scarcely justified the large amount of coal it involved, as every ship had to light up another boiler. We arrived and anchored in this magnificent but unfrequented bay at 5 p.m. the same evening, the various ships mooring in accordance with a signal from the Hercules. The Penelope had the misfortune to carry away her cable through having too much weigh on when within her bearing. Shortly after our arrival, we had practical demonstration of our being in Ireland by the torrents of rain which descended, and the heavy gale which commenced to blow directly after our arrival, and has lasted without intermission ever since. We found a couple of colliers at anchor here with a supply of coal for the Squadron, and the Valiant and Defence commenced to coal from them—a tedious and dirty operation—at 8 a.m. the following morning, coaling all through the following night until 6 o'clock on Sunday morning. The reason for sending nine ironclads to such a place as this, and then going to the trouble and expense of hiring steamers to convey coal hither for them, is not apparent. We are anchored about eight miles from Belmullet; but as that place is little better than a village, there are no supplies of any sort procurable there, and we are all at present on starvation diet. There is fishing and shooting in abundance to be had, but it is all strictly preserved. Our arrival has, as might very well be expected, completely upset all the mail arrangements of the place. The Belmullet post office is kept by a woman, who has a little girl to assist her, a staff which is, no doubt, sufficient for the ordinary requirements of the village, but scarcely enough to sort the mails arriving for about 5,000 officers and men, to grant the large number of money-orders required, or despatch the innumerable telegrams handed in. The official address promulgated by the Admiralty for our mails—"Blacksod, county Galway,"—has also caused innumerable errors, Belmullet being the name of the post office for this bay, which is not in Galway. The consequence is, that since arrival here our letters have been few, while newspapers and parcels have been conspicuous by their absence. This is all the more extraordinary as at the other places we have visited punctuality in our mail arrangements was the most pleasing element of the cruise. The Admiral inspected the Lord Warden on the 12th, and the Penelope yesterday, in very boisterous weather. The result of none of the inspections has been as yet divulged, and we presume Sir Anthony is waiting till he has completed them before ventilating his opinions as to the condition and internal economy generally of the ships of the Squadron. A court-martial assembled on board the Lord Warden yesterday, for the trial of Richard Dagnall, ordinary seaman of the Valiant, on charges of absence without leave, and refusing to obey orders. Capt. W. R. Kennedy, of the Lord Warden, was the president, and the other members were Coms. J. S. Hallifax, of the Hector; Eustace Rooke, of the Lord Warden; Gerard R. Bromley, of the Bellisle; and W. H. G. Nowell, of the Repulse; with Mr. William W. Perry, secretary to the Admiral-Superintendent, officiating deputy-judge-advocate of the Fleet. The prisoner pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and at the expiration of that period to be dismissed from H.M.'s service. Should the present heavy weather continue, there will be no opportunity for carrying out the torpedo experiments, which were, I believe, the principal raison d'être of our being sent to this outlandish place. We are timed to leave here on the afternoon of the 17th inst. for Berehaven, where we are to make a stay of two days. Everyone is looking forward with delight to the termination of the cruise, which is universally voted to be the most uninteresting and monotonous of any the "Reserve Squadron" has yet been sent on. Up to the present time we have succeeded in more or less upsetting the postal arrangements of each place we have been to, have raised supplies of every description to famine prices, while at the same time the supplies procurable have been so small in proportion to the size of the squadron that, as I have said before, we have been more or less on starvation diet. On the other hand, the practical results of the cruise have been small, as our principal duties have consisted in steaming from port to port, mooring, and getting under weigh. The Hecate has been having a decidedly wet time of it ever since our arrival here. The weather at present would certainly be admirable for testing her sea-worthiness, as it is at present blowing a strong gale from the southward; but I presume the Admiral does not care to assume the responsibility of sending her to sea in such weather, even with an escort.

Eighteen officers of the Aldershot Division, and of the Royal Artillery of the garrison at Woolwich, have entered horses for the cup presented by the Empress Eugénie, value 100 guineas, to be run for at the Aldershot Summer Races on Saturday next, the 26th inst.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of taking over as a going concern and working and extending the important and well-known business of military and sporting cartridge manufacturers established by Mr. George Kynoch, at Witton, near Birmingham, who is at present the sole proprietor, and which has been carried on by him for upwards of 20 years under the style of Kynoch and Company.

This business is one of the most extensive in the United Kingdom, being second only to that of Messrs. Eley Brothers, of London, which was similarly formed into a limited liability company in the year 1874, and has proved to be a most successful and dividend-paying undertaking. The £10 Shares are now quoted on the London Stock Exchange at £34 per Share, equal to a premium of 240 per cent.

The works cover an area of about 24 acres, and are extensive and complete; the machinery and plant is of the most modern description, and thoroughly adapted for all requirements. The premises and their contents are adequately insured against fire. With these facilities the Company will be in a position to take extensive home, colonial, and foreign government contracts, and many orders are now in hand.

An independent examination of the books of the Firm for the ten years ending June 30, 1883, has been made by Messrs Good, Daniels, and Co., Chartered Accountants, of Moorgate Street, London, for the Directors, who, judging from the past profits, have satisfied themselves that the business is one from which highly satisfactory results may be expected.

With the additional capital now proposed to be introduced, the profits must necessarily be increased by the Company's operations.

The valuation of the property by Messrs. Wheatly, Kirk, Price, and Goulty, of London and Manchester, is £84,241, exclusive of stock-in-trade and any consideration for goodwill.

The stock-in-trade at the last stock-taking, viz., January 1, 1884 (from which date the business is to be taken over), amounted to more than £30,000, and the total value, therefore, of the entire business, exclusive of goodwill, is about £114,000.

The price which the vendor (who is the promoter of the Company) has agreed to accept for the entire business as a going concern, as from January 1 last (up to which date he will receive and pay all debts due to or by the Firm), with the land, plant and machinery, and stock-in-trade, is the sum of £70,000 in cash and £40,000 in the Ordinary Shares of the Company. He has, however, stipulated that when the holders of the Preference Shares shall have received in dividends and bonuses the entire return of their capital, then the Ordinary and Preference Shares are to rank together.

No payment is made by the Company for the very valuable good-will and patents.

The vendor undertakes to defray all the expenses incidental to the formation of the Company up to the first allotment of shares, exclusive of the cost of the valuation before referred to and the usual share brokerage charges.

The capital of the Company is £150,000, divided into 11,000 Seven per Cent. Preference Shares of £10 each (now offered for subscription) and 4,000 Ordinary Shares of £10 each. The Preference Shares are entitled to 7 per cent. preference dividends, cumulative, and, in addition, after payment of 7 per cent. dividends on the Ordinary Shares, they will be entitled to two-thirds of the surplus profits by way of bonus, the remaining one-third accruing to the Ordinary Shares, until such time as the Preference and Ordinary Shares rank equally for dividends as stated above.

The following contracts and agreements have been entered into: An agreement, dated July 16, 1884, between George Kynoch and the Company. An agreement dated May 30, 1884, between George Kynoch and Charles Henry Strutt. A letter from Wheatly, Kirk, Price, and Goulty to Charles Henry Strutt, dated April 29, 1884; and a letter from Charles Henry Strutt, to H. P. Gordon, dated July 8, 1884.

In addition to the foregoing, there are many current trade contracts too numerous to set out, and applicants for Shares are to be deemed to have waived the publication of the names and dates thereof.

Full Prospectus, with Form of Application for Shares, can be obtained from Messrs. Lloyds, Barnett, and Bosanquet (Limited), 60 and 62 Lombard Street, E.C., London, and Colmore Row, Birmingham, and its Branches; or from the Secretary, 144 Leadenhall Street, E.C.; or from the Brokers, Messrs. Reviews.

Russian Travellers in Mongolia and China. By P. Piassetsky. Translated by J. Gordon Cumming. 2 vols. (Chapman and Hall).

[SECOND NOTICE.]

The second volume of this highly-interesting book of travel opens with a lively description of the preparations that were being made to effect the passage of the dreaded "Loun-Tan" rapids, the most dangerous that the travellers had yet met with. Everything was absolutely in the hands of Sin-Van, who stood in the bows with a boat-hook in one hand and gave the signal for departure with the other, as the roar of the rapids rendered it impossible to hear a single word. It was a perilous undertaking to risk the loss of everything belonging to the members of the expedition. Were the ropes to give way, as the boats slowly approached the rapids, everything would go to the bottom—notes, maps, botanical collections, stuffed birds, drawings, minerals, samples of silk, &c. At length the formidable Loun Tan was passed, and the boat got into a comparatively calm reach of the river, but the danger was not over. Suddenly a cargo-boat went over the rapids, and was immediately followed by Sosnowsky's boat with at least 20 men at the ropes. "Possessed by a great fear, our eyes followed the boat which was already in the midst of the rapids. The waves broke against her broad, flat stern, and rocked her more and more violently from side to side, till one stronger than the rest caught and smashed her in on the starboard. The water rushed in, every one on board flew to the other side, which rose in proportion as the starboard sank, and the ropes broke one after the other, as the resistance of the boat became greater. At one moment her stern was not far from the bank, so that the interpreter, the photographer, and the Cossack Pawlow jumped on shore." We must pass over the author's description of how the travellers were occupied in trying, with the aid of some divers who were in the district, to recover as much as possible of the lost property, and how they made their way safely to the town of Han-tchong-fou, with its picturesque entrance, which did good service during the Taipings insurrection. Here it became necessary to halt for two or three weeks, to repair the damage caused by the wreck. After a very short delay in their new quarters, the travellers decided on paying their respects to the local authorities, and consequently proceeded in full uniform to the Yamin, where the Governor resided. They seem to have got on very well indeed, and what is more important, to have worked so successfully on the feelings of the people as to recoup the entire losses which they had incurred. One very valuable addition to their party was Mr. Tan, who stood six feet three in height and was an officer. He wished to enter into service, and was at once engaged to do everything possible for the good of his employers, for a viaticum of £4 a month. During this delay the author turned his attention to the important subject of public instruction in China, and the mode in which the public and private schools were conducted. These chapters are replete with interest in every respect, The subject also of "Crime in China" is touched upon. There is a variety in the mode of paying the death penalty of crime which renders it more appalling. The following are the three modes of execution:—First, by gradual strangulation, so as to give the soul time to get out of the body; second, by decapitation, and third by quartering. These various modes of death are not, however, to be compared to the horrors of this gallery. One criminal was boiled in a cauldron; elsewhere a woman was squeezed to death between two stones, or pulverised in a mortar; and farther on a man was being sawn in two. About the middle of May, the travellers commenced to pay their farewell visits, and to give and receive presents. The departure appeared to be much regretted, for the members of the expedition had made many friends, while the author of these records created a profound sensation throughout that portion of the Chinese Empire by his wonderful skill in drawing and photographing. The fourth chapter contains an amusing description of the first visit paid by the expedition to Tzo-Tzoun-Tan, one of the six officials of the highest rank in China. This grand personage, who, by-the-by, acted with extreme discourtesy, and studied insult in more than one instance, is described as small, stout, and about 60 years old. His countenance resembles that of Prince Bismarck, except that he was dark; he had barely three hairs in his beard, but his moustache was rather thicker. His movements were full of affectation, and perhaps intended to produce a profound impression. His opinion upon men's dispositions belonging to various nations he gave very distinctly, stating that "the men belonging to great nations have an upright disposition, but those born in small countries are of crooked minds." To demonstrate his meaning he stretched out or doubled up his little finger. He then questioned his guests on some European Powers, besides Russia, which he knew by name,—England, France, Italy, Prussia, and Turkey. He had a vague idea of international politics, and asks several questions as to the relations existing between European nations, their respective strength, and their allowances. Great was his delight to believe as he did that England was always hostile to Russia, ever seeking to do her harm and to encourage her enemies. He could come to no other conclusion, and in order to demonstrate the crooked disposition of the English, the little old man bent his fingers quite double. Finally, he tried to make a comparison between China and Russia, and wanted to know who would remain victorious in the event of there being a war between these nations? This was rather awkward, but evasion had no effect. The opinion required was,—"If we were equally matched, who would come off victorious, China or Russia?" When pressed still farther, Sosnowsky replied that, in case of war, Russia would prevail. Tzo was evidently puzzled, and addressed the same question to each of his guests, and invariably received the answer, "that the Russians would get the best of it." As the author observes, "in the simplicity of his heart, he thought China was quite in a position to make head against Russia, and even conquer her. I was was really sorry for him; it seemed as if he must have had some cherished design against us." In the same chapter, the reader will find a description of a grand review, and also of a visit to the public prison. Among the occupants of the latter was a prisoner who was seated alone on his bed:—

> "The Governor," whispered the warder. "He was tall, and had an expressive countenance; his long, disordered hair fell on his shoulders,—a long, thick beard covered his chest, and the iron chain fastened round his neck went down his body, and, separating into two parts, reached down to his feet. His crime appeared to be that of making some mistakes during the war. He had been two years in confinement, and seemed to have forgotten the past; it was very painful to see him standing in front of me. I could hardly persuade him to sit down again, and I seated myself beside him on his bed. It was very sad to see a man in this situation, especially as his culpability was doubtful. Two years in irons already, and not to know how or when the punishment would end. I took leave of him, and proceeded farther."

A great many different accounts of prison life in China and of the instruments of torture made use of in that kingdom have already been published. In this volume the matter is mentioned at some length, and deserves particular attention. It appears that a new building has been recently erected to meet the requirements of the numerous instruments of torture which are employed in China. This chamber of horrors is presided over by a youthful and polite mandarin, who performed his duties with much intelligence. Those who take pleasure in studying questions of this class are now afforded an excellent opportunity of improving their minds. Six instruments, each of them an instrument of appalling torture, are minutely described, beginning with the simple bamboo cane and ending with the knife or the scythe used for beheading, and filled with mercury to give it weight; also, the column or boards on which quartering and strangulation take place; and more particular still, a simple-looking instrument, which nevertheless has terrific power. Its attentions are lavished on the big toe, and the torture suffered cannot be described. It is called the "gouan-gouan-tzy." We regret not being able to accompany the author still further in his wanderings and adventures. The work he has published is one that cannot fail to attract attention, particularly at a moment when a war between France and China may be regarded as within "measurable distance." This is not merely a work of amusement, but one which unfolds not a little of inner life in China, and does so with a complete absence of prejudice or bias. Moreover, much valuable information on various points may be gleaned from a perusal of these volumes.

It is rather remarkable that no less than five out of the ten articles in the present number of the Quarterly should have distinctly political objects in view, whilst the Edinburgh, the organ of the Liberal party, does not indulge in a review of any single question connected with the policy of the Government, abroad or at home. It is scarcely credible that in such a crisis as the present, foreseen sufficiently long ago to have enabled the editor to have summoned one of his trusty veterans to deal with such a measure as the Franchise Bill, that the outcome of the controversy between the House of Lords and the House of Commons arising out of it, should have been allowed to pass unnoticed in the Edinburgh Review. "The Future of the Congo" possesses, we admit, an interest of its own, but we should have thought the future, or at least the present of Egypt, would have been a subject of greater attractiveness; and a retrospect of the career of M. de Vitrolles, an active agent of the Bourbons at the time of the close of the First Empire, is scarcely of adequate moment to atone for the absence of any disquisition from the Whig point of view on the present aspect of affairs. The Quarterly, in "Municipal London," "England and Her Second Colonial Empire," "The West Indies and Sugar Bounties," "Redistribution and Representative Democracy," and "Mr. Gladstone's Foreign Policy," covers wide fields of political thought, and furnishes under appropriate headings solid arguments for those who consider that on the part of her Majesty's Ministers there has been some want of foresight and sagacity, as well as much temerity and theoretical rashness, in dealing with vital interests. We shall not, however, venture upon criticisms of the comparative merits of the two great quarterlies, which, quite apart from political questions, contain the usual amount of good writing on subjects of the first importance. Naval officers especially will find the article upon International Law, in the Edinburgh, well-worthy of their attention.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—May I, through the Army and Navy Gazette, draw the attention of the medical officers of the Navy and Army who have received their education at, or been connected with, the above hospital, to its present critical position? This noble institution is actually going on by drawing on its capital, its celebrated professors giving their services and time gratis. If each officer would give a day's pay to the institution it would be of great assistance, and I venture to propose this.—I am, &c., A Surgeon-General.

The Army and Navy Journal of New York says:—"Mr. B. B. Hotchkiss, who is now in this country, on Saturday last received a despatch from his English agent, informing him that the English Government had signed a contract for the purchase of the Hotchkiss. The first order is for between 60 and 70 of the 6-lb. single-barrel Hotchkiss revolving cannon, and a full supply for the British service will absorb some 2,000 guns. The Hotchkiss is adopted after an exhaustive trial at Shoeburyness, in which 1,000 rounds were fired, and the result is a new tribute to American invention. Twenty-five years ago the father of Mr. Hotchkiss, who is now at the age of 85, living on his farm in Connecticut, went to England with an elder brother of B. B. Hotchkiss, on an unsuccessful mission to introduce a Yankee gun—a muzzle-loading musket with an expanding projectile. The progress of invention since that day is marked by the introduction of the Hotchkiss machine-gun into the British service."

We hear that the Spanish ironclad cruiser Gravina has been totally wrecked in a hurricane off one of the islands in the Philippine Archipelago. Two officers and seven of the crew perished. No further details have yet been received.

The speech-day of the Royal Naval Female School is fixed for Tuesday, July 22, at noon, on which occasion the prizes will be distributed by Lady Brassey. Naval officers and their lady relatives wishing to attend can obtain cards of admission from the Secretary, at his office, 32 Sackville Street, W.

"Health Exhibition."—"Visitors should not fail to view the fine exhibit of Messrs. Rose and Co., London, of their Lime Juice Cordial. and other Lime Juice beverages, at Stand No. 116, in main transept. The exhibit includes a fine display of the Jamaica Lime Fruit from which these delicious non-alcoholic beverages are made. Their Lime Juice Cordial supplies a most refreshing summer drink in water, effervescing in all aerated waters. No beverage has received higher recommendation from the medical profession as eminently wholesome."—See Lancet. No table should be without it. The Wholesale Stores are 11 Curtain Road, Finsbury.

THE DEBATE ON THE NAVY.

The debate on Tuesday evening in the House of Commons, when the Navy Estimates were brought on, began by Mr. Egerton bringing forward the complaint of the foremen of her Majesty's Dockyards, that before they are eligible to become constructors they have to pass through a second grade as assistant-constructors. This places the dockyard foremen in an unfavourable position as regards Admiralty draughtsmen, who are now invariably sent down from Whitehall to fill the best appointments in the dockyards, although they are merely theoretical men, and have not the practical knowledge possessed by the foremen, who have been trained to command men and maintain discipline.

Sir Thomas Brassey took the opportunity thus afforded him of making a few observations on the scheme recommended in the report of the Committee on Constructors. "The plan adopted was the one proposed by Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, when Controller of the Navy. Inquiries made by a Departmental Committee under the present Administration had brought to light the fact that the educational results of the training at the Naval College had been unsatisfactory. The failure was attributed to the insufficient prospects held out to successful students. The necessity of doing something to meet the reasonable demands of the scientific men was clearly shown to the Committee on Constructors. Of the 28 students who had obtained professional certificates at college, no less than 12 had left the service for private employment, and among these 12 were included a large proportion of our ablest men. Of the six students who had obtained first-class certificates, four had left. The Committee recommended that a corps should be created, with the honourable title of Royal Corps of Constructors, which should comprise the shipbuilding officers of every grade above the rank of foremen, and with substantial additions of pay, especially in the junior ranks. It was further recommended that salaries in London and the dockyards should be on the same scale, thus facilitating the interchange of duties and the combination of practical and theoretical knowledge. The regulations affecting the appointment of that valuable class of public servants, the foremen of the yards, were left unchanged by the Committee. But all foremen under 50 years of age who could pass a qualifying examination in the rudiments of ship design, and who were recommended for promotion, were admitted into the corps. Once admitted, promotion would be by merit alone. The Controller's Department specially directed the attention of the Committee to the position of the leading men of the dockyards. With a view to increase their authority, it was recommended that the leading men should be styled inspectors—a revival of a former rating—and that they should receive increased remuneration in the form of salary instead of daily wages. The Admiralty fully recognised the valuable services rendered by the foremen, whether trained at the College or in the dockyards, and they sincerely regretted that none of the five foremen who had been nominated were able to pass in the recent examination for the Corps of Constructors. But it was intended to decentralise the management of the dockyards in a larger degree than at present, to do more designing work at the dockyards and less at the Admiralty. It was necessary, therefore, that the members of the Corps of Constructors should combine considerable professional and scientific attainments with practical ability in construction, and they were assured by the Controller and the professional officers of his department that the present qualifying examination was of a simpler character than that held under the former system of competition. All those who failed to pass would have another chance, and it was confidently expected that the result would be satisfactory. With regard to the position of foremen who had been appointed as second-class assistant-constructors, they were nominally one step farther from the rank of constructor than they were under the old system. But they were eligible for promotion by selection. The number of superior appointments open to them had not been diminished, while two superior appointments at Hong Kong and Bermuda had been created. Hence the prospects open to men of ability had been materially improved. Promotions from the grades of second-class assistant-constructors would, they trusted, be given to the dockyard officials at an early date. He could not pass from this subject without expressing on behalf of the Admiralty their sense of the zeal and eminent ability which the constructors of the Navy, the foremen, and the leading men, had brought to the discharge of their difficult duties."

Sir H. Wolff asked whether all Admiralty draughtsmen who had been advanced under the new scheme had passed an examination to enter the service, and elicited that only two had not done so.

Mr. Macliver regretted that discontent existed in H.M.'s Dockyards, and hoped the Admiralty would endeavour to make the men contented, by adjusting the inequalities of pay complained of.

Mr. Gorst considered that the great object of dockyard management should be to create content. Why, he asked, should it be assumed that because shipwrights could not pass a qualifying examination they were not competent men? In his opinion men of 40 or 50 were not fit to go up for an examination. He would not like to feel that his position was to be determined by his ability to answer questions at an examination. It was downright cruelty to ask a man employed for years on practical work to come into a room and answer questions which sheer nervousness or timidity might render him unable to do; and he cited a case in point that had been brought to his knowledge.

Mr. Puleston advised the Admiralty to take up the question of Naval Reform as a whole, instead of going in for piecemeal legislation; for by doing so, when they removed the grievance of one class, the effect was very often to make that of another class appear harder. He advocated the appointment of a committee of inquiry, to go thoroughly into everything connected with the administration of the Navy.

Sir Thomas Brassey here repudiated all intention on the part of the Admiralty to increase the pay of men working in H.M.'s Dockyards, remarking that his colleagues were bound to look at these matters in a commercial spirit, and to make the best terms they could for the taxpayers.

This brought Mr. Rylands to his feet to demand that, if it really were the honest desire of the Admiralty to economise, why had they not closed the yards except for repairing purposes, and proceed to have all men-of-war built by contract? He maintained that the Government got no equivalent return for the money spent in the dockyards.

Com. Price, traversed these assertions. Referring to the case of the foremen of the yard, he said the secret of their case, as between them and the draughtsmen of the Admiralty who had stepped into their places, was that at the Admiralty there existed a very nice family party, who had a good deal to do with the reorganisation of the dockyards. They had taken all the plums to themselves, and the unfortunate foremen of the dockyards had been left out in the cold. Com. Price proceeded to point out the fallacy of the arguments used in the House of Lords by the First Lord of the Admiralty, and characterised Lord Northbrook's speech as one delivered for party and electioneering purposes, and strongly condemned the policy of so dealing with questions affecting the well-being of the Navy. Lord Northbrook's argument was as hollow as a sieve, for, owing to Liberal mismanagement prior to 1874, the late Mr. Ward Hunt, on taking office, found he had but 14 sea-going ironclads, but when the Conservative Government handed over the Navy to the present Liberal Government in 1880, there was twice that number of sea-going ironclads afloat and ready for use. A Parliamentary paper which he had gave the comparison of the actual expenditure in the Navy, which was divided into effective and non-effective services. He found that the Conservative Government spent upon the effective services in their six years of office, £54,298,000,—that was to say, an average expenditure on effective services of £9,049,000 odd per annum. The Liberal Government in their four years of office, from 1880 to 1884, spent £33,694,000, or an average of £8,423,000 odd per annum. According, therefore, to the Parliamentary paper, the Conservative Party had spent considerably more upon the effective services of the Navy per annum than the Liberal Government had done. That, however, was perhaps not the only test that should be taken; he asked the Committee to look at the total votes. If they considered those votes which gave the actual amount of money spent upon building and repairing the Fleet, including stores and other materials, it would be found that the average sum in each year of the Conservative Government came to £3,549,000. The average sum spent upon the same votes by the Liberal Government was £3,358,000; so that from whichever point of view they looked at the question, taking Lord Northbrook's test of expenditure, they found that the Conservative Government had spent annually upon building, repairing, and maintaining their Fleet, a larger sum than the Liberal Government had expended.

The Chairman of the Committee here called Com. Price's attention to the fact that he was out of order in replying in that House to a speech made in another place; so the gallant Member for Devonport concluded by stating that he found that, instead of possessing but three first-class ironclads, the French had, built and building, no less than fifteen ships of the same size and tonnage as the ten English ships referred to by Lord Northbrook. He hoped the Admiralty would not only be guided by considerations as to the relative strength of our Navy with that of any foreign power, but that they would have regard to the greater duties which the English Navy had to perform. Mr. Illingworth objected to the tone of the discussion, which he denounced as pernicious. France ought not to be always insulted by having her intentions called in question. No more should any other foreign Power. He saw no end to such a policy but calamity and disaster. "Every year the House had to listen to a number of members representing dockyard constituencies ventilating in that House the alleged grievances of the employés. At the present time, when the price of labour was falling, it was positively indecent for Members whose position was by no means disinterested to ask for increased pay to the dockyard employé. . . . . . It was impossible for the dockyard officials to supervise the work in such a way that it should be as cheap as contract work, and the wisest policy the Government could pursue was to keep up the dockyards only so far as they were necessary for doing the repairs of the Navy. For the ordinary shipbuilding contracts should be entered into with private firms, who would execute the work much more cheaply than the Government could. Every year they were subjected to these discussions in the House. There was the strongest possible evidence of the necessity for a financial Committee, which might deal with all these matters in a quiet business-like way where these whining appeals on the part of the dockyards would not get into the Press and go forth to the country." Admiral Sir John Hay reminded the last speaker and the Committee that dockyards were necessary for men-of-war to retire to for repairs after a naval engagement. That for such a purpose the dockyards must belong to the Crown, and be fortified places, as private unprotected yards would never answer the purpose or the requirements of the country. Hence, to be prepared for war emergencies, a dockyard staff was necessary even in time of peace. Among that staff discipline had to be maintained; and experience had taught us that no one could do this better than a Naval officer, when placed as superintendent of the yard. Mr. W. H. Smith followed, somewhat after his usual strain. He has been at the Admiralty, and appears to think he may go there again; hence, he seems disinclined to commit himself to any pledges or decisive expression of opinion, except with regard to the necessity of repairing ships' hulls and boilers. He urged the necessity of laying down fewer ships and of completing them more rapidly than the present Administration was doing. He praised the Brazilian armour-clad Riachuelo, completed by Mr. Samuda since Sept. 1881. He would like to know when the new breech-loading guns would be ready for the Navy, as he considered that, did we look upon war as a possibility, it would be criminal neglect not to use all our resources to maintain the Navy at its highest degree of efficiency. The Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty was pleased to be able to recognise the candid and cordial spirit in which Mr. W. H. Smith had dealt with the subject before the Committee. The observations made by the right hon. gentleman were free from anything approaching to a party spirit; and he agreed with the greater part of what the right hon. gentleman said as to the necessity of avoiding those delays, which were costly and destructive of efficiency, from ships being commenced and left for long periods in an incomplete condition. The Inflexible was an example often quoted of a vessel which was a long time under construction. As he said in introducing the Navy Estimates, the alternative was that we should shut our eyes to all improvements suggested while a ship was in course of building. Since 1880, we had been engaged in one of the most important duties which ever fell to the lot of a Government—the total transformation of the armament of the Navy, the change not only from muzzle-loading to breech-loading, but from a gun suited to one kind of powder to another, and from one theory of gunnery to another. In 1880, nothing, or very little, had been done in the direction of the alteration of the armament, whereas other countries had gone rapidly ahead. The Government appointed an Ordnance Committee, to which was intrusted the responsibility of laying down the principles upon which this great change of armament should be conducted. This was a thing which was not to be done in a day. This Ordnance Committee had not been so dilatory as to some it might appear to have been. We were now in this position with regard to guns, that the types to be adopted had been settled; and he was glad to hear from Col. Maitland, of the Gun Factory, at the Royal United Service Institution, that in his opinion we had the most modern gun in Europe. The question of guns directly affected the construction of ships. It was not merely the size and dimensions of a gun that had to be considered, but also the charge, the weight of the projectile, the power of the gun, and the magazine accommodation required in the ship. So long as there was a doubt upon any point, it was necessary that the building of a ship should be retarded, and sometimes delay arose unexpectedly in this way after the building of a ship had been commenced. As to the number of guns that were ready, he believed the statement quoted by the right hon. gentleman was in accordance with the facts. The guns were not actually delivered, but they were lying ready for delivery, and it was better that they should remain at Woolwich until they were wanted, as there were facilities there for keeping them in proper condition. It took from 18 months to two years to complete a 63-ton gun. With regard to the Leander class of ships, the Leander herself would be completed in December in the dockyard, and the others would not be finished until after her trial. If her trial proved to be satisfactory, they would be completed in about three months. As to the Minotaur, Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles class, they had not yet come to want repair; but they would very soon be out of order, the Minotaur probably within about nine months. It therefore became urgent for the Admiralty to consider what should be done with these important and valuable vessels. He could not state positively at present what course would be taken with regard to them, but he believed the impression on the minds of the Board was that it would be worth while to spend the requisite money upon the Minotaur when she came out of commission, in order that she might have a thorough repair, have compound engines put into her, and undergo a slight improvement in her armament. The cost of putting the Minotaur in order would be between £140,000 and £200,000. It was not at all unlikely that the Black Prince might get a small repair, so as to take the place of the Minotaur; but new boilers would not be put into her for at least two years. By that time the Admiralty could see how the Minotaur succeeded, and then the Board might decide what would be the best course to adopt with regard to other vessels. It was a question for consideration whether all these ships were worth the expenditure of the money that would be needed to put them into a condition of repair. Some undoubtedly were, but others were, perhaps, not worth the outlay. They had this advantage that they were not heavily armed, the armour was only 4½ in., but that was quite enough to make them perfectly secure against shell-fire and machine-gun fire. They were, therefore, extremely good and useful ships for a variety of purposes, such as Channel service and exercising seamen. The Admiralty appreciated the importance, and, in fact, the necessity of dealing with this class of ships. With reference to the Collingwood and Edinburgh, the Admiralty had found it possible to push on those vessels somewhat more rapidly than was expected when he introduced the Estimates. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman then went on to say that it was alleged that Lord Northbrook had expressed the opinion that ironclads were obsolete. This was a mistake. Lord Northbrook had merely said that if, by some extraordinary liberality of the British taxpayers and the House of Commons, three or four millions were placed at the disposal of the Admiralty for building ironclads, he would have some difficulty in knowing how to spend the money on ironclads alone, when there were a hundred modes of attack and defence to which a great deal of it might be applied. The Government were responsible to the House for the strength and sufficiency of the Navy; they were fully aware of that responsibility, and he could assure the right hon. gentleman that it was not from any niggardly spirit, or any fear of opposition in that House or outside it, that they contented themselves with the proposals they had made. Capt. Price asked whether the Secretary of the Admiralty would give the names of the three French ships which they were told on high authority were the only first-class ships which the French had under construction. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman said that was treading on very dangerous ground. He did not think that anyone on the part of the Admiralty had said that the French Government had only three first-class ships under construction. What was said was there were only three such ships completed. Everybody formed his own conception of what a first-class ship was, and that was a matter of so much difficulty that, after every sort of contrivance which the ingenuity and technical skill of their advisers could suggest for framing a standard of value for an ironclad ship, at last the tendency at the Admiralty was to give up any idea of framing a test of that sort except in one way—namely, the tons of displacement of ships of the same period. Lord H. Lennox complained of the smallness of the attendance of Members at these debates. When some trumpery party question was to be discussed, Members had four or five line whips issued to them, whereas for occasions like these, which were of the highest importance to the Empire, notices were issued without any lines at all. For some years he had in vain called attention to the advances in ship-building which were being made by the French Navy, and had pointed out in vain to three successive Admiralties that their force would, when the French programme was complete, be superior to ours both in ships and guns. He had endeavoured also to point out the immense cost of ships like the Inflexible in consequence of the enormous time consumed in their construction, in her case extending over a period of nine years. He agreed entirely with his hon. friend that nothing was more calculated to mislead the public as to the strength of the British Navy than what was called laying down ships, without any intention of spending money upon their completion. When the late Government had come into office they had found the vast majority of ships worth repairing and requiring repairs, and had set to work to do so. They had also found that the question of the armour-plates required investigation. They had made a most exhaustive inquiry into the subject, and had satisfied themselves that the composite plates of iron and steel were the best. Foreign Governments had now arrived at a similar conclusion, after careful enquiries. If the late Government had not spent the money which they did upon repairs, the list of fighting ships would now have been greatly attenuated. As to the comparison between the Navies of England and France, the Secretary to the Admiralty had said that there was less activity in France than there had been two years ago. When he had himself called attention to this activity two years ago, he had been laughed at and called an alarmist. He would ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether it was not a fact that the same sum of money had been voted annually by the Chambers for years—within a few pounds, at all events. The French had eight vessels of the most important type in the Estimates for this year, either completed or in the course of completion. In other countries, such as France and Italy, a programme was first laid down of what was considered necessary for the Navy in that year, and then the money was forthcoming from the Treasury; whereas in this country, the Admiralty has to do the most they could with the wretched pittance granted to them. Italy was now the third naval Power in the world, and Russia had laid down five new ironclads, three for the Baltic and two for the Black Sea. One other point to which he would allude was the question of torpedoes. We were a long way behind both France and Germany in the number of our torpedoes, and the French Government had got ten times the number of torpedo-boats that we had. With regard to the guns for the Navy, it seemed to be a small matter whether the delay was in their manufacture or in that of their mountings in the ships. The fact remained, the guns were all on paper, so far as our ships were concerned. Mr. Jenkins called attention to the value of Malta as a dockyard, a fact which was admitted by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, who stated that every possible use would be made of the yard as labour there was cheap. The Orion would be ready to leave Malta in two or three months. An unimportant conversation then ensued, the votes were severally agreed to, when progress was reported, and the debate on the Navy came to an end, as usual, without result, unless the reasons given by Mr. Illingworth may be taken to account for the neglect paid to the Navy by civilian Members of Parliament.

EGYPTIAN ITEMS.

Leave of absence has been granted to Capt. Robinson, of the G Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., to Sept. 15.

Lieut.-Col. Slade, Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Egyptian Army, left Cairo on July 1 for Keneh on special duty. During the absence of Lieut.-Col. Slade, the duties are undertaken by Lieut.-Col. Quirk.

Pending Gen. Lennox's arrival, Lieut.-Col. White, of the 2nd Batn. Essex Regiment, assumed the temporary command of the 2nd Brigade of the Army of Occupation at the Abbassiyeh, hitherto commanded by Major-Gen. Davis, C.B, who has assumed command of the 1st Brigade at Cairo.

Dr. Mackie, C.M.G., Surgeon to H.M.'s Consulate and British Delegate at the Quarantine Board, left Alexandria by the P. & O. s.s. Lombardy, on leave of absence, handing over his duties on the Board to Mr. J. F. Russell, vice-consul.

M. de Lesseps, says the Egyptian Gazette, accompanied by the members of the committee appointed by the International Suez Canal Commission to examine whether the section of the canal between the Bitter Lakes and Port Tewfik can be sufficiently enlarged, or whether a second channel will be necessary, may be expected to arrive in Egypt in October next. The English members of the committee are Sir John Coote and Sir Charles Hartley.

The Egyptian Gazette announces that :—"Major-Gen. J. Davis has relinquished the command of the 2nd Brigade of the Army of Occupation at Abbassiyeh, and assumed that of the 1st Brigade at Cairo."

A War Office notification says :—"The Queen has approved the appointment of Major-Gen. A. J. Lyon-Fremantle to be a Brigadier-General on the Staff in Egypt."

The sixth annual "Army Rifle Meeting" will be held at Aldershot on the 7th, 8th, and 9th proximo. Prizes to the amount of £500 are offered; entries close July 20.

THE WIMBLEDON CAMP.

The twenty-fifth meeting of the National Rifle Association began on Monday morning at 9 o'clock. There was no ceremony of any kind. The inter-university match for the Humphry Challenge Cup brought together teams of four each. The cause of the small teams is the limited area of selection. Each competitor must, by the conditions, be an enrolled Volunteer of the corps of his university, and not more than four years must have elapsed since he first came into residence at the university. The scores were :—Oxford—Pte. Barnett, 173 points; Lieut. Russel Rendle, 157; Capt. Freemantle, 156; Colour-Serjt. Foulkes, 148; total, 634. Cambridge—Ptes. Richardson, 142; A. W. Drury, 140; J. C. Dalton, 139; H. A. Callender, 128; total, 549.

London Amusements.

Next week will conclude the season at the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, when six performances will be given. "Carmen" was represented on Monday night, for the benefit of Madame Pauline Lucca, who thus closed her present engagement. On Tuesday evening was produced Ernest Reyer's grand opera, "Sigurd," in four acts and nine tableaux, originally brought out last January at Brussels. The libretto is founded on the familiar Scandinavian legend already turned to lyrical purposes by the late Richard Wagner. Madame Albani appeared to great advantage as the rebellious Valkyrie Brunhilda, and Madame Fursch-Madi was a stately and impressively sonorous Hilda. The representative of Sigurd was M. Jourdain, a tenor with a powerful voice of extensive compass. The scenic effects were well contrived, and when the opera is rendered more acceptable by compression the melodious strains of the composer will be more readily recognised. A second performance is announced for this (Saturday) evening. On Thursday Madame Hélène Crosmond made her début in "Aida," and on Friday Madame Adelina Patti appeared in "La Traviata" for the last time this season.

The Wimbledon meeting of the National Rifle Association withdraws so many of the habitual frequenters from our West-end theatres that another motive has prompted managers to bring their seasons to a speedy termination. The Haymarket, the Princess's, and the St. James's, together with the Vaudeville, close their doors this week, and the Empire Theatre, in Leicester Square, announces the last nights of "Chilperic," and a recess which will continue till September.

In Victor Hugo's elaborate drama of "Ruy Blas," Madame Sarah Bernhardt does not appear to so much advantage as in her previous impersonations. Her embodiment of the Queen is not to be regarded among her triumphs at the GAIETY, and, accordingly, "Fédora" and "Macbeth" have been included among the later performances announced in the week's programme of French plays.

Among the morning performances of the week may be recognised the representation of "She Stoops to Conquer" at the STRAND, when Miss Lucy Buckstone as Miss Hardcastle and Mr. Rowland Buckstone as Tony Lumpkin had a very encouraging reception. On Wednesday a benefit was arranged at the PRINCE'S for Mr. Charles Kelly, a very attractive programme being provided, and on Thursday, at the same theatre, Mrs. Digby Willoughby appeared in "Lady Clare," with Mr. Alfred Bucklaw in his original part of John Middleton.

At the NOVELTY THEATRE has been produced an amusing burlesque of the drama of "Called Back," daringly travestied by Mr. W. Yardley under the title of "The Scalded Back," with Mr. Harry Nicholls and Miss Lottie Venne to parody the peculiarities of Mr. Kyrle Bellew and Miss Lingard.

The Tussaud Exhibition of Waxwork, for fifty years exhibited at the Baker Street Bazaar, has been this week removed to a palatial structure in the Marylebone Road, closely adjoining the railway-station. Here the greatly-extended collection of waxwork figures and portrait-models of celebrities and notorities is now opened to the public; and it may be said unreservedly that this remarkably interesting exhibition has never before been shown to such advantage.

Under the special patronage of H.R.H. the Princess Louise, an illustrated recital of Schiller's "Lay of the Bell" was given on Monday afternoon, at Cromwell House, South Kensington, in aid of that excellent institution, "The Women's Emigration Society." An important branch of this establishment, founded by the Viscountess Strangford, is at 13 Dorset Street, Portman Square, where lady emigrants find a home, and receive advice and assistance with personal recommendations to those in authority abroad.

On this (Saturday) evening, Mr. Augustus Daly's company of comedians from New York will take possession of TOOLE'S THEATRE, and make their first appearance in this country. The earliest production will be a four-act farcical comedy from the German, called "Casting the Boomerang," successfully played for more than a year and a half in the United States.

A summer season will be commenced at the HAYMARKET THEATRE, under the management of Mr. Brookfield, on Aug. 9. A new version of "Le Reveil du Lion," produced more than forty years ago, will be associated with the ballad farce of "The Waterman," in which Mr. Herbert Reeves will appear as Tom Tug.

Messrs. Kynoch and Co., whose name and work are well known as makers of ammunition and cartridges since the firm commenced business twenty years ago, have associated themselves as a limited company, with a Board of which Lord Bury is chairman, and Sir E. Stafford, Lieut.-Gen. Wray, Major Jones (Sir W. Armstrong and Co.), Mr. Pigou (of Dartford), and Mr. G. Kynoch are directors, and have issued a prospectus which will be found elsewhere announcing the issue of 11,000 Seven-per-Cent. Preference Shares of £10 each, &c., with the view of purchasing and working the business at Witton for the manufacture of arms, machine and other guns, and all kinds of material for war and sporting. The "resources of civilisation" consist very largely of such articles, and next to brewers and distillers, the manufacturers of the fulmina belli seem to be the most prosperous and money-making people in the kingdom.

(Where not otherwise stated, the foregoing commissions and announcements bear date July 19, and the current year must be understood.

Indian Notes.

The Homeward Mail says:—"The rumour reported last week by the correspondent of the Times, that, owing to the fact of the existing number of cavalry regiments being found insufficient for frontier duty, the Government contemplate the raising of two or three new regiments, will be received with gratification, but also with considerable hesitation, in England. It is now just two years since a memorable move was made in the opposite direction, four regiments of cavalry being abolished, at the same time with nineteen regiments of infantry, on the plea of convenience, and the advantages to be attained by the massing of men in larger and more solid bodies. So great an object was this reform considered, that the organisation of many of the receiving regiments was seriously disturbed in order to carry it out, and large numbers of capable soldiers were lost from the disbanded corps, compulsory transfer being often as little to the taste of sowars and sepoys as to that of the rank and file in our scattered British battalions. It was supposed that notwithstanding this defection the total strength of the Native Army would suffer no diminution, since the establishment on peace footing of the cavalry regiment was to be raised from 457 to 550, and of the infantry from 712 to 832. The need for increase in the strength of our native cavalry is admitted and even urged by the Anglo-Indian Press, and we rejoice to be informed that the subject is occupying the attention of Government. At the same time we believe an announcement that orders had been actually issued for the raising of new regiments would cause considerable surprise. It will be remembered that the Reserve scheme of the Simla Commission did not include any reserve for the cavalry, and the tendency of late years has been to decrease and to undervalue the usefulness of this particular arm."

A telegram from Meerut states that the Duke of Connaught arrived there on Monday afternoon.

A Southern army surgeon tells the following story of the battle of Chickamauga:—"The hottest part of the fight was on Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday night we were expecting to renew the fight the next day. I turned to Mr. M———. Says I: Andrew, look in that ambulance and you will find a two-gallon jug. Take it down in yonder ravine and bring it full of water. If any of the boys get hurt to-morrow they might suffer for water. He took the jug and went off, and I neither heard nor saw any more of Andrew till Tuesday morning after the fight was over. He came up almost breathless with the jug of water. 'Doctor,' says he, 'I found the water at last; I would have brought it if it had taken me three weeks to find it!'"

The troops at Aldershot, under Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison, had a sham fight on the Fox Hills on Tuesday, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, Lord Hartington, Lord Morley, Lord Wolseley, and Gen. Sir A. Herbert being present. The total on parade was 6,624 men, 1,535 horses, and 50 guns.

The Naval Pension of £50 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Capt. John E. Mills on July 7, 1884, has been awarded to Retired Capt. John Symons, from that date.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

LESSONS in modern Naval tactics can be learnt even from the collision of two ironclads. While responding to a signal directing a simple formation to be made by an evolutionary squadron, a collision has taken place between the Defence and the Valiant. The results of this accident point clearly to what may happen again and again in future Naval battles. Then, broadside-ships and rams, turret-ships and end-on fighting ships, will be mixed up promiscuously. We have repeatedly pointed out in these columns that the supersession of wooden by armour-clad ships revolutionised Naval tactics. We have consistently and perseveringly maintained that, whereas in the days of wooden ships, each seaman sought to gain the weather-guage of his enemy, so as to have him at his mercy, and be able to range up alongside him to board, or to cross his bow or stern to rake his decks, so in the days of armour-plated ships and rams it would be the duty of every commanding officer to attack his enemy "end on," so as, in the first place, to offer as small and invulnerable a target as possible to his enemy's guns, while himself being at all times ready to deliver a deadly blow with his ram, and thus decide the combat. These being our views, we have repeatedly pointed out, as in duty bound, that, in our opinion, broadside ships are a mistake. We have advocated the construction of ships built strong in the bow and at the stern, carrying heavy guns both forward and aft, mounted expressly for the "end-on" attack and defence. In these views of the future requirements of the Navy we have been supported by Admiral Sir George Elliot and other eminent naval officers, but the Admiralty have persistently turned a deaf ear to all entreaties to alter their policy of construction, and have adhered to their plan of constructing ships intended to answer all purposes, while in reality adapted to none. With regard to the manner in which the Defence has been handled by Captain Pollard, and the general inability of most of the ships of the Reserve Squadron to keep station while cruising under steam, we decline to deal, as it will shortly form the subject of a court-martial. Suffice it to say that the reports of our correspondent with the Squadron have all along foreshadowed a calamity of some sort. But, as we have so often before stated, this was only to be expected in a squadron composed of ships which are only brought together, and made to work together, for a few days in each year, and are then sent back to their stations, and left to ground on their beef bones for the remainder of the year. The recent collision off the Irish coast proves that our views are correct. Far better would it be for the Reserves, and better, too, would it be for the safety of the country, were these ships used more often, and made to exercise the Fleet men by detachments, in such manner that both officers and men shall not forget their training. Then such accidents as the one which occurred last week to the Defence and Valiant would be unheard of. But that accident, disgraceful as it is, serves a useful purpose, in addition to demonstrating the folly of keeping ships at their moorings for the best part of twelve months, with barely sufficient hands on board to keep them clean, and of then manning them with men from the shore for the purpose of sending them to sea in company as an evolutionary squadron. The collision between the Defence and the Valiant proves that broadside ships are useless, and that, too, in more ways than one, for it is only natural to expect that in a modern Naval combat the same thing may occur over and over again. And what then? This. A French ship, for example, having ranged up abreast of one of our "jack-of-all-trades" craft, and having the advantage in speed known to be possessed by the French ships, suddenly puts her helm hard over, with intent to ram, just as the Defence did last week. The manœuvre is seen on board the English ship, and her helm is instantly put hard over too, as was done with admirable judgment and skill on board the Valiant. The result would be that both ships would be brought round again on nearly parallel courses. The French ship, however, from her superior speed, would succeed in striking the English ship obliquely, and would then glance off, grazing her side, and tearing away in the act everything that projects therefrom, as was done on board the Valiant, when even the Nordenfelt gun on her bulwarks—which does not project much, it must be admitted—was torn away and hurled into the sea. The modern breech-loading ordnance, now being supplied as broadside guns to our ships, is far longer than any muzzle-loader ever used in the Navy in a similar manner. The muzzles of these guns project a long way out of their port-holes, and as a natural consequence, would be dismounted one by one as the enemy's ship caught them while gliding past. Hence, the most important lesson taught by the recent collision is that nothing should project beyond the sides of a modern armour-clad. These should be so constructed as to allow of their being clean shaved by an enemy without his being able to scrape off a single bolt-head, much less dismount guns, whether large or small, machine-guns or heavy ordnance. The damage done to the bows of the Defence also proves how weak, structurally, our ships are in that very part—the ram—where they should be the strongest; for, although the ram of the Defence did not penetrate the Valiant, the strain brought upon her bow when the ram struck obliquely the latter's side amidships, was sufficient to open a great rent in the bows of the Defence. We shudder to think of the result should such ships ever be under the necessity of actually driving their rams home into the hull of an enemy's ship, for assuredly their bows would telescope, and send them, with all on board, to a watery grave. In the present instance, however, but for Lieutenant Daubeny's coolness, skill as a seaman, thorough knowledge of his duty, and readiness of resource in handling a ship under all circumstances, the Valiant would have shared the fate of the Vanguard. The country has been saved this great loss by that officer's presence of mind. The country will not forget the fact, and it is to be hoped the Admiralty will remember it, and at the same time take to heart the lessons taught by the Defence in her recent attempt to ram the Valiant; for should the Admiralty not profit by the occasion, and persist in adhering to their present fatuitous policy, it is highly probable that, before a Naval war breaks out, a large number of our armour-clads will have been sunk, in collisions arising from the want of knowledge of steam tactics which obtains throughout all grades of the service,—a want of knowledge for which the Admiralty are alone to blame. Were it not for the possibility that many valuable lives would be lost, we should feel inclined to wish each one of the obsolete ships belonging to the Channel and Reserve Squadrons safely berthed beside the Vanguard at the bottom of the Deep; for we fear that so long as the Admiralty can call them ships, and are able to consider them as part of our fighting Naval strength, so long is there very little chance of any radical change being brought about in the constructive policy of the Admiralty. And yet, surely, the rent in the bows of the Defence points the moral which adorns the tale.

A NUMBER of young gentlemen now enter the ranks for the purpose of obtaining commissions; in most cases they have previously failed to attain their object by competitive examination. If it is necessary that the British gentleman should be educated up to a certain standard before receiving a commission in the Army, surely it is an absurdity to grant one to the gentleman who has failed in a competition, simply because he has served a certain time in a lower social position. Does a gentleman improve his social position by serving in the ranks? Does a gentleman learn better to govern men? No; he learns all the trickeries of the trade; he is behind the scenes, and if, as a commissioned officer, he makes use of the knowledge thus obtained, he is looked upon by the soldier as a sneak. There must be many cases of disappointment, if young men of good social position are told that by sinking that position for a time, they may regain it in the profession they wish to enter, but for which they were in the first instance comparatively disqualified. And will the disappointed man make a good soldier? The gentleman recruit who is not taken by the hand by some one in authority has a bad time, both with non-commissioned officers and men, unless he is of a stamp to hold his own, and intends to soldier whether he gets a commission or not. The gentleman recruit has generally an allowance varying from 20s. to 10s. a week. By this means he gets his equipment looked after, and makes friends with the non-commissioned officer; it is reported also that he may be seen in some garrison towns, when off duty, walking about in mufti, and that when on pass in London, uniform is always dispensed with. In former days, promotion from the ranks was, as a rule, a reward for gallant deeds or long and meritorious service, and not for young men of superior social position, who could not attain to the educational equivalent required by the rules of the service to obtain a commission. If the authorities do not see their way to admit young gentlemen into the commissioned ranks of the service under a lower scale of professional education, and if men who are educationally inferior are to be admitted by some means, let those who fail, but who by their examination show a certain amount of promise, be posted to regiments on probation. They could have an inexpensive uniform, and be periodically examined, say, every six weeks, and if at the end of twelve months they prove themselves industrious, let them have commissions; but if during their probation they prove themselves idle, let them be dismissed. All expenses during probation should be defrayed by themselves. The education of an English gentleman should be sufficient for a British officer, not such an education as is fitting for a Staff appointment. Give every opportunity for qualifying for such appointments, and give them to those qualified through the proper channels; but reserve something for the regimental officer, the man who makes the soldier for the staff to gain honour and promotion by. An arrangement such as the one here proposed would at least have the merit of giving all a chance. At present, all is doubt and uncertainty for the gentlemen in the ranks. It is a case of many being called but few being chosen, the chosen ones frequently owing their success rather to good-luck than merit or good management.

Admiral Lord Alcester will on Monday proceed to Elswick, to inspect the fast cruisers there built and building for various foreign Governments.

Prince George of Wales has passed a most creditable examination for his commission as a lieutenant in the Navy, having obtained 975 marks out of 1,000, in seamanship obtaining a first-class certificate, and is now an acting sub-lieutenant. On the return of the Canada to England, Prince George will be granted two months' leave of absence, after which, we presume, he will be prepared to pass his final examinations.

Some of the principal actions which have occurred within a century in the month of July, between British and Foreign Forces, are as follows, viz.:—Naval—July 15, 1798, the 64-gun ship Lion, in action off Carthagena with Spanish frigates Pomona, Proserpine, Santa Cazilda, and Santa Dorotéa, and capture of last-named ship; July 7, 1800, the British sloop Dart, with brigs Biter and Boxer, cut out French frigate Desirée from Dunkerque; July 12, 1801, Admiral Sir James Saumarez in Cœsar, with Pompée, Spencer, Superb, Venerable, Audacious, and Hannibal (74), Thames, frigate, and Pasley, brig, attacked French Squadron and Spanish batteries in Algeciras Bay; July 19, 1806, capture of French frigate Guerriére by Blanche, off Faroe; July 25, 1806, the Greyhound, frigate, and sloop Harrier, captured the Dutch frigate Pallas and armed merchant ships Vittoria and Batavia in the Java seas; July 6, 1808, the 38-gun frigate Seahorse, in action with Turkish frigates Badére-Zaffa and Alis-Fezan, and capture of the former; July 27, 1806, the Mars captured French frigate Rhin at sea; July 6, 1809, the British sloop Bonne Citoyenne captured French ship Furieuse; July 6 and 8, 1810, capture of Isle de Bourbon; July 6, 1812, the Dictator (74), Calypso (18), Podargus (14), and Flamer, brig, in action at Lyngoe, Norway, with Danish vessels Nayaden (48), brigs Laaland, Samsoe, and Kiel, and gunboats, nearly all of which were destroyed. The chief military actions were Maida, July 4, 1806; Buenos Ayres, July 4 and 5, 1807; Coa, near Almeida, July 24, 1810; Isle de Bourbon, July 8, 1810; Salamanca, July 22, 1812, and San Sebastian, July 7 to 31, 1813.

Captain Fullerton, of the Sapphire, will, as stated in these columns in February last, succeed to the command of the Royal yacht when Captain Thomson retires in October.

The correspondence relating to the mission of Vice-Admiral Sir William Hewett to King Johannes of Abyssinia, together with the Treaty concluded between Great Britain, Egypt, and Abyssinia, has been submitted to Parliament, and these documents prove that we were perfectly justified months ago in stating that the Government were relying entirely on Sir William Hewett's ability to arrange an Abyssinian Expedition to release General Gordon and the beleaguered Egyptian garrisons in the Soudan. At the time we made this announcement, it was ridiculed on the ground that no nation, claiming to be considered civilised, would ever dream of letting loose the fierce Galla horsemen of King Johannes to overrun the Soudan, as the carnage of the unfortunate Arab population that must ensue would be simply appalling. In this view we concurred and still regard Mr. Gladstone's policy of getting the wild hordes of Abyssinia to do England's work as a mistake, if not a crime. Still we cannot refrain from congratulating Sir William Hewett on this, his first, great diplomatic success, and shall refer to his doings in Abyssinia on a future occasion.

We hear that the Admiralty have under consideration a proposal to fit up a refrigerating room in lieu of the old ice room on board the Indian troopships, so as to enable fresh meat, fish, poultry, vegetables, &c., to be carried for the whole voyage, and thus do away with the necessity of carrying live stock, the animals so carried being the cause of many stenches on board in the warm latitudes. The only obstacle to the immediate introduction of a refrigerating room is that an inordinate amount of space is taken up for the storage of porter for the troops.

The promotion of Lieutenant Simpson to the rank of Commander over the heads of 160 Lieutenants senior to him on the List has given rise to much dissatisfaction. A Post-Captain writes to call our attention to the fact that, as a Sub-Lieutenant, this officer only took a second-class certificate in seamanship and third-class certificates in gunnery and navigation, and he asserts that Lieutenant Simpson owes his promotion solely to personal interest. Our correspondent then says:—"It is not so much the want of promotion as the disgust felt at such abuses of power and patronage that renders Naval men discontented. Four gunnery officers were promoted in the last batch, showing that the 'gunnery element' at the Admiralty is now all powerful. Why is Commander Lang promoted over the heads of many good officers when he is serving the Chinese, and drawing a large salary? Commander Errington, for example, commanded the smartest ship on the China station. His 1st Lieutenant is made, but he is passed over. One need not go very deep into the matter to guess what sinister influences may have been at work to retard his well-earned promotion! The Naval Press should call attention to these unfair promotions."

Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony Hoskins, in the Hercules, with the remaining seven ships of the Reserve Squadron in company, was off the Lizard on Thursday evening, and arrived in Plymouth Sound yesterday. Orders have been received by Admiral Sir Houston Stewart from the Admiralty that, on the arrival of the Reserve Squadron, the Defence and Valiant are to be at once taken up the harbour and docked; the remaining ships, except the Hecate, will remain in the Sound. The Hecate has been condemned, and her ship's company will be at once turned over to the Belleisle. No date has been fixed as yet for holding the court-martial directed to be convened to try Captain Pollard, but it is rumoured that it will be held early next week.

The provision of this year's 6-pounder quick-firing shell guns has been divided between Messrs. Nordenfelt and Hotchkiss by the Admiralty, with the proviso that the Hotchkiss 6-pounder shall be adapted to the Nordenfelt ammunition and mountings. No Hotchkiss machine-guns have been purchased by the Admiralty, as stated in the Army and Navy Journal of New York. We are also informed that the Admiralty are taking up the question of field-carriages for machine-guns, and have already decided against a carriage that has to unlimber and reverse to fire, the recent operations in the Soudan appearing to their Lordships to prove that machine-guns should be mounted on a carriage which can advance and allow of the gun being fired at the same time. Lieutenant-Colonel Alt, commanding the Central London Rangers, has offered to lend the Admiralty for experimental purposes, free of charge, two of his magazine carriages for machine-guns, which can be used in the required manner.

The Admiralty have called upon Lieutenant Sanders, commanding the Starling on the West Coast of Africa, to "explain" the appearance in the columns of a contemporary of his letter to his father concerning the Niger Expedition of last year. The Starling has also been ordered home, although she has not been two years in commission, and her crew are in splendid condition. From the Cape we also hear that Admiral Salmon has expressed his fear that, the fact of Lieutenant Sanders' father having published his son's letter, "will tell against" the latter at the Admiralty.

Sub-Lieutenant Waymouth having obtained five first-class certificates—seamanship, navigation, torpedo, gunnery, and pilotage—has been promoted to the rank of Lieutenant, with seniority of June 20, 1883, in addition to which he has been awarded by the Admiralty a prize of books and instruments to the value of £10. Lieutenant Waymouth is the son of Mr. Waymouth, Paymaster, and was born on November 18, 1863. He entered as naval cadet January 15, 1877, passed out of the Britannia as midshipman December 20, 1878, served in the Temeraire on the Mediterranean station, and in the Euryalus on the East Indies station, was employed under Sir W. Hewett during the Egyptian Campaign, 1882 (medal and star), and landed at Suez during the occupation of the town.

The Royal Marine Light Infantry Lieutenants have gained upon those of the Artillery branch of the corps in the matter of promotion, since the former are now obtaining their companies in ten years, while the five officers recently promoted in the Artillery have served twelve years, and have only gained their companies under the provisions of the Order in Council of November 29, 1881, which limits the time as a Lieutenant to 12 years.

Lieutenant-Colonel John C. Hore, of the Chatham Division, Royal Marines, appeared before a medical board on Saturday last, for report as to his fitness for further service. Should this officer be retired, the following seniority promotions will ensue:—Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Mackey A. H. J. Heriot, to be Lieutenant-Colonel at Chatham; Brevet Major H. A. Peake, to be Major at Plymouth; and Lieutenant T. H. de M. Roche, to be Captain at the Plymouth Division.

Capt. Wilson, of the Hecla, nearly lost his life as well as the lives of his galley's crew, when returning to his ship at Spithead on Thursday. The galley was under sail and capsized in a sudden squall. The boat drifted athwart the mooring chains of a dredger, and both Capt. Wilson and his men were some time in the water before they were picked up.

All officers and non-commissioned officers who have been selected to join the class of instruction in field works to be formed at the School of Military Engineering at Chatham on Aug. 1 are to report themselves there on the 31st inst.

A telegram, dated Durban, July 24, states that the military operations in the Zululand Reserve are directed towards surrounding the Inkandhla Bush, where the rebels have their chief stronghold. They will probably evacuate the position.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Cairo, July 11, 1884.

The total of the sick list is 3 officers and 632 men. The admittances into the hospital during the week were 166 and the clearances 221. No deaths are reported.

We were becoming so tired of our friend the Mudir of Dongola, his alternate victories and defeats, his patriotism and his perfidy, that Reuter's agent very wisely determined to finish with him once for all, and announced that the Mudir had declared for the Mahdi. There appeared to be no particularly fresh foundation for the assertion, but of course it is always safe to assume that any given Egyptian official will do those things which he ought not to do, and the general feeling in Cairo appears to be that the information is certainly not new, possibly not true, and probably does not matter.

The following is a list of the forces at present in Egypt:—

	Officers.	Men.	Total.
Cairo	129	5,177	5,306
Alexandria	35	1,302	1,337
Assouan	18	694	712
Keneh	14	738	752
Suakim	13	378	391
Port Said	2	115	117
	211	8,404	8,615

Major Grieve is reconnoitring between Keneh and Kosseir.

General Freemantle, accompanied by Major Stopford and Captains Heath and Kelly, with 20 Engineers, left on July 24 for Suakim.

The merchant who recently arrived at Assouan, bringing news of the Mahdi, is coming to Cairo by the next mail.

The Mahdi is stated to be short of ammunition.

Reviews.

Practical Arabic Grammar. By Captain Green, R.E.—It is very creditable to a hard-worked officer on service, and speaks highly for his capacity and industry, that he should have found time and inclination to compile, for the use of his brother officers in Egypt, such a book as that which is named at the head of this notice. And Captain Green's zeal has certainly not been whetted by extraordinary promotion and good fortune in his profession,—rather it would seem that he has been less fortunate than others who have not done so much. It is not everyone can pronounce an opinion of critical value on an Arabic grammar; but we have submitted Captain Green's work to the judgment of an excellent scholar, who says he considers it "sound and scientific" as a grammar, and excellently adapted for the object indicated by the author. The system is that of Dr. Otto, and the works of Fâris, Yacoob Naklah, Forbes, &c., have been consulted, as well as the grammar of Wahrmund; and Captain Green, having wisely decided to publish the book at Cairo, where Ismail Pasha developed the admirable press at Boulac to a high degree of excellence, possessed the advantage of local assistance and knowledge, and was enabled to have the help of Shaker-el-Kowri, chief interpreter, Pay Department, Yacoob Naklah himself, and of Hassan Pasha Husni, director of the Press, in preparing a book which deserves every support, and may be recommended with confidence as one of the best, if not the very best, Arabic grammars in existence.

Sir W. Hewett ends his report on the Abyssinian mission with the following paragraph:—

"During the negotiations with the King of Abyssinia, M. Mitzaki, his Hellenic Majesty's Consul-General, rendered me great assistance, and my thanks are due to him for the same. I have the honour to specially represent to your lordship that Mason Bey, Governor of Massowah, who, acting under the orders of his Government, accompanied me as Egyptian Representative, rendered me the most cordial co-operation throughout the whole period of my mission, and most ably assisted me in bringing to a conclusion the negotiations with which I was entrusted. Capt. Tristram C. S. Speedy, whose services your lordship had placed at my disposal, was also of the greatest assistance to me. His knowledge of the language and customs of the Abyssinian Court and people was invaluable. Lieut. F. W. A. Kennedy, Black Watch, was, by the courtesy of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Stephenson, K.C.B., commanding in Egypt, attached to the mission as transport officer. Very great credit is due to Mr. Kennedy for the efficient manner in which he conducted the duties of his department in a country which presents many obstacles to transport. I cannot close my despatch without bringing to your lordship's notice the services of my acting secretary, Mr. Horace Harrison Smith, R.N., who also acted as accountant officer of the mission. Much assistance was also rendered me by Mr. Lis John Masascha Worky, the King's interpreter. This official is a young Abyssinian who was educated in Bombay. He with his brother and an uncle are the only three Abyssinians living in the country able to speak English."

The new "Wimbledon" portable pocket bath, made by the Army Rubber Company, weighs only 19 oz., and when folded in case measures but 9 in. by 6 in. by 1¼ in. thick. It holds four gallons of (hot or cold) water, and is very cheap.

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street, scientifically adapts his improved Spectacles to strengthen and assist the weakest sights. Testimonials from Earl Lindsay, Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, containing valuable suggestions, post free.

THE EGYPTIAN CAMPAIGN.

The Committee appointed to inquire into the working of the Commissariat and Transport service in the Egyptian war reassembled yesterday, Col. Stanley in the chair. Comy.-Gen. Watt, in continuing his evidence, stated that the Director of Supplies controlled the pay of the Commissariat Department. He could veto any proposed expenditure, subject to appeal to the Surveyor-General if the Commissary-General did not concur. The responsibility as to equipment was never clearly defined. The Director of Supplies did not interfere unless referred to by the Director of Artillery. He had had great experience in transport waggons and carts. He thought Malta carts should have been sent. At Gibraltar the samples of flour were always inspected by him, but the flour remained at the responsibility of the contractor, who had to exchange any flour that deteriorated within six months. At an early stage he objected to mules being obtained in Turkish territory. Earlier still he proposed getting mules up from Natal, and found that the question was already under the Secretary of State's consideration. With his present experience in pressing hay, he would not trust to inspection by a Commissariat officer alone, but would associate a veterinary or mounted officer. He thought that his position in the War Office was too subordinate, and represented the same to Sir John Adye. He suggested light waggons coming up from the Cape, thinking it possible that in a march across the desert they might be found useful. The idea of getting drivers from India emanated from Col. Furse, and afterwards it was again proposed by himself and approved. It was necessary to obtain drivers from the same places as the mules, or the men would have been unacquainted with the animals. The Commissary-General only purchased animals for his own corps, the Commissariat and the Transport Corps, but as a matter of convenience he bought for the regimental transport also, until a Remount Committee was appointed. When preparations were first considered, the provision of regimental transport was considered as the service of most pressing importance, and regiments were to be equipped by transfers from the Royal Artillery and the Transport Corps. He thought the present establishment of the Commissariat Department insufficient to cope with a serious war. He thought the Commissariat Corps should have a sufficient nucleus of trained drivers to supply the regimental transport of regiments going on service. He did not think because there was no real failure in Egypt that therefore the War Office system was good. Sir J. Adye would naturally speak well of what occurred in Egypt, as he was responsible for everything. There were one or two mistakes in Egypt, but the service was well conducted, although the Commissariat was in a state of transition. He saw the samples of flour after the complaints arrived, and they still seemed quite good, but he could not be responsible from merely seeing small samples. The Director of Supplies and the Commissary-General both recommended that mules should not be drawn from Turkey. Sir J. Adye overruled both. He never officially protested against his position as Commissary-General, but he did so privately. It was very unpleasant for him that Mr. Haliburton, who had been his junior in the Commissariat, should be his superior in the War Office, though he had the tact never to make him feel it. He thought that as the office was constituted, the transfer of the Commissariat to the Commander-in-Chief should be cancelled. He would give all executive duties to the Military Department. He had no reason to think that there was anything wrong as to hay at Liverpool; if he had thought so he would have recommended a different inspection. Sir E. Morris saw all the proceedings of the Mobilization Committee. He thought there was no serious failure in Egypt, and nothing approaching a breakdown—the accidents of the flour and the hay were the sole drawbacks. The Committee then agreed to report the evidence taken to the House, and to suggest that they be reappointed next session.

Gen. H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar was entertained at dinner at the Wanderers' Club on Saturday last.

Indian Notes.

Two columns will move into the Zhob Valley in the middle of September for the purpose of punishing the Kakars. One of these columns, under Gen. Tanner, is to start from Quetta and to proceed through Kowar and along the Hurnai route to Thull. It will probably consist of four guns of the Royal Artillery, two guns of the No. 1 Native Mountain Battery, 150 men of the 10th Bengal Lancers, 150 of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, 150 of the 1st Bombay Lancers, 700 of the North Staffordshire Regt., 700 of Rattray's Sikhs, 500 of the 2nd Bombay Grenadiers, 250 of the Madras Pioneers, 250 of the 3rd Native Light Infantry, and 75 Sappers. The second column, under Gen. Kennedy, will march from the Indus, entering the Zhob Valley by the Gomul Pass. It will probably consist of No. 4 Mountain Battery, the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, the 1st Sikh Infantry, the 4th Sikhs, and the 1st Punjab Infantry.

A good-service pension has been conferred on Col. R. Mallaby, Bombay S.C., from Feb. 3, 1884, vice Col. W. Bannerman, Bombay S.C., succeeded to the colonel's allowance.

The Lahore paper hears that Col. Nedham is about to vacate the appointment of Deputy-Judge-Advocate-Gen., on account of age. This officer's position is peculiar, since, although he has apparently upwards of thirty-nine years' service, he will not succeed to colonel's allowances for more than three years.

In September last Sir F. Roberts suggested the advisability of converting the South Indian Railway station at Trichinopoly into a defensive post. A committee of military officers was framed, and the Major-Gen. commanding the Bangalore Division was appointed president. A Madras paper learns that the committee has drawn up a very elaborate report, and also that Sir F. Roberts agrees with the views expressed in the report; and the whole scheme will be laid before Government.

To fix the scale of the Commissariat Establishment necessary to undertake the shipment of stores for a field force, the Madras Government have appointed a special committee to report on the subject, with Col. Hawkes as president, and Major Atkinson, of the Qrmr.-Gen.'s Department, Qrmr. Hogan, of the South Wales Borderers, and Mr. Bartlett, Assist.-Master-Attendant, as members.

The Government of India have, the Pioneer hears, resolved to do away with the extra privilege leave now enjoyed by the Punjab Frontier Force, and to allow officers to take only two months' privilege leave yearly instead of 90 days, thus bringing them under the same conditions regarding leave as obtain in the Bengal Army generally.

The selection of Gen. Lumsden as Chief British Commissioner for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier has taken all India by surprise, his name never having been even suggested in India. The choice is very generally condemned, the prevalent belief being that many more competent officers could have been found. It is stated, however, that the Commander-in-Chief approves of the appointment. The Government is now engaged in selecting the subordinate members of the Commission, and in considering the recommendation of the Foreign Office on the subject of an escort. The Indian portion of the Commission will start shortly, making its way through Beloochistan to Seistan, and viâ the Persian frontier to Sarakhs, as it is believed that the presence of British troops passing through Afghanistan viâ Candahar and Herat would disquiet the tribes and render the march dangerous.

The Secretary of State has directed that when an officer is provided with a Government passage from India to an Imperial colony, arrangements must be made locally for the payment on account of any excess baggage to which he is entitled by his rank, and not leave the officer to claim a refund after the voyage.

The question of camps of exercise at Delhi and Hassan Abdul is under consideration at Army Head-quarters in India. If the plan is carried out the camps will be on an unusually large scale, as the reliefs this year are very numerous, and many regiments marching up and down country can be halted for two or three weeks at the points of concentration.

SHAM-FIGHT AT ALDERSHOT.

The whole of the available troops of the Cavalry, Artillery, and Infantry paraded between 6 and 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning to go through a sham-fight. They were divided into attacking and defending forces. The former, which was under the command of Major-Gen. Fraser, V.C., C.B., consisted of two regiments of cavalry, four batteries of artillery, and five battalions of infantry, and was formed up in Claycart Bottom, with outposts east of a line from the flagstaff on Eelmoor Hill to Puckridge Hill. The defending, or western, force was commanded by Major-Gen. the Hon. W. Feilding, and included one regiment of cavalry, three batteries of artillery. and three battalions of infantry drawn up behind Long Hill, with outposts west of a line from Burn's Hill to Ravine Head. The field operations, which lasted about two hours, were carried out with an idea that a detached force advancing from Elvetham upon Aldershot had reached Long Hill, when it learns from its scouts that the Aldershot force was advancing in superior numbers through the Claycart plantations. The manœuvres were carried out under the direction of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison, K.C.B.

A marriage is arranged to take place in August between Capt. G. Lennard Thomson, Royal Sussex Regiment, son of the late Major-General Thomson, C.B., and Miss Nina Blacker-Douglas, eldest daughter of Mr. St. John Blacker-Douglas, of Elm Park, county Armagh.

London Amusements.

The season of the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, will be this (Saturday) evening brought to a close. Five performances have been given during the week. On Monday "Don Giovanni" was repeated, with Madame Adelina Patti and the same cast as on a preceding occasion. Tuesday was assigned to "Mefistofele." On Thursdey "Sigurd" was given for the third time. Madame Albani selected "Faust" for her benefit on Friday, and Madame Adelina Patti closes the lyrical campaign for the present year with "Linda di Chamouni," represented for the first time this season. At the conclusion of the opera Madame Patti will sing the solo in "God Save the Queen."

To-night (Saturday) terminates the season of French plays at the GAIETY. Madame Sarah Bernhardt, who has appeared during the week in "Fédora" and "Adrienne Lecouvreur," now goes on a short provincial tour, commencing at Birmingham on Monday. Next week Mr. Edward Terry reappears in the farcical comedy of "The Rocket" and "High Life Below Stairs," arranged as a musical farce.

The PRINCESS's will be reopened with "Claudian" on Saturday, Aug. 23. The VAUDEVILLE will be reopened with "Confusion" on Bank Holiday.

Mr. Augustus Daly's company of comedians introduces to us at TOOLE'S THEATRE a very favourable illustration of the histrionic talent now presented in America. "Casting the Boomerang," avowedly adapted from the German, may not be a work of very exalted dramatic merit, but it is undoubtedly amusing, and is admirably played by the actors and actresses transferred from Daly's Theatre, New York. The characters are portrayed with a care and skill thoroughly justifying the high reputation gained by each performer in the United States, and the combined effect ensures the happiest results. The personal charms of Miss Virginia Dreher, Miss May Fielding, and Miss Ada Rehan were as quickly recognised by the audience as the artistic embodiment of an elderly lady presented by Mrs. G. H. Gilbert, and the cleverness of the assumptions identified with the names of Messrs. John Drew, James Lewis, O. Skinner, W. Gilbert, W. Thompson, and Charles Leclercq. The engagement is limited to a term of six weeks. The first English company of actors taken to America appeared at Williamsburg, Virginia, Sept. 5, 1752, under the management of Lewis and William Hallam, brothers of Admiral Hallam, who succeeded Giffard as proprietors of the Goodman Fields Theatre, where David Garrick achieved his early triumphs.

Miss Nelly Harris took her first benefit on Tuesday afternoon at the NOVELTY THEATRE, which has attained success under her management. A new poetical play in one act called "Cupid's Messenger," written by Mr. A. C. Calmour, was produced on the occasion. An imaginary love passage in the life of Sir Philip Sidney is the theme of a slight story told in Elizabethan blank verse, showing how a damsel of the court, disguised as a page, expedited the resolve of a tardy wooer. The characters were efficiently represented by Miss Kate Rorke, Miss Leslie Bell, and Miss Maude Milton.

Mr. Malcolm E. Boyd's five-act historical play, entitled "The Lost Cause," was introduced to a metropolitan audience at the GLOBE on Tuesday afternoon, and gained a favourable reception. The piece, originally produced at Torquay in February, 1881, was then called "Bonnie Dundee; or, The Last of the Scottish Cavaliers;" but the title has been since altered, probably with a view of avoiding the revival of some discouraging memories of an unsuccessful drama bearing the same name, written by Mr. Edmund Falconer, and produced at Drury Lane Theatre 21 years ago. At the Globe Miss Lingard effectively represented the heroine, Isabel Elliott, and Miss Lucy Buckstone the sister of the hero.

At Coombe House, Kingston-on-Thames, a performance of the forest scenes from "As You Like It," was given, under the direction of Lady Archibald Campbell, on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon, in aid of a charitable institution. The representation took place in the thickly-wooded gronnds of the estate which were placed at her disposal by the Duke of Cambridge. Miss Calhoun was Rosalind; Lady Archibald Campbell, Orlando; Mr. Elliott, Touchstone; and Mr. Hermann Vezin, Jaques.

The last nights of "The Beggar Student" are announced at the ALHAMBRA THEATRE, and on Saturday, Aug. 2, a newly-written and enlarged version of F. C. Burnand's popular burlesque, "Black-eyed Susan," is to be produced at this theatre, with original music, specially composed by Mr. Alfred Lee. Amongst the artistes engaged are Misses Mulholland, Bessie Bonehill, Kate Leamar, Katie Lee, Jessie Mayland, Nellie Douglas, Rose Moncrieff, and Bertie Venn; Messrs. W. H. Lingard, George Mudie, J. H. Jarvis, George A. Honey, Fred Storey, T. Hodges, Stuart Paget, and Edwin Danvers. Included in the new programme will be two Grand Ballets, in which Mdlles. Pertoldi, Elliott, and Palladino, and the Brothers Griffiths (grotesques) will appear. On Bank Holiday, Monday, Aug. 4, there will be a special morning performance, on which occasion half-price only will be charged for admission.

With this week terminates the season of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at ST. GEORGE'S HALL. The vacation will extend to the commencement of October.

Mr. Augustus Harris has renewed his lease of DRURY LANE THEATRE for another five years, at an annual rental of £6,000, with additional payments for extra nights. The theatre, about to be redecorated at a cost to the lessee of £2,000, will be opened for the dramatic season in September.

The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Major-Gen. Newdigate, commanding the South-Eastern District, Major-Gen. Fraser, and Sir F. FitzWygram, visited Canterbury and inspected the Cavalry Depôt on Tuesday.

A marriage will take place in September between Capt. J. Fane Alexander, late 17th Lancers, and Miss Aurea Otway Mayne, youngest daughter of the late Major Henry Otway Mayne, Mayne's Horse.

THE RESERVE SQUADRON.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Berehaven, Bantry Bay, July 22, 1884.

THE DEFENCE AND VALIANT IN COLLISION.

If the cruise of the Squadron hitherto has been uneventful, we have certainly made up for it during the last few days. The collision between the Valiant and Defence, which was nearly ending in a disastrous manner, is, of course, the prevailing topic of conversation, and the cause of it the source of wonder and amazement. We left Blacksod Bay on the afternoon of the 17th inst., the weather, which had been boisterous in the extreme during the previous five days, having moderated considerably. Apparently, too, it was in great degree local, as a few hours after leaving the Bay we were in perfectly smooth water. For some time after leaving the Hecate danced about in a very lively manner, much to our amusement, but not so to those on board, who must have little relished the volumes of water she shipped over her bows. The forenoon of the following day was devoted to target-practice by the Coastguardsmen on board, who fired another four rounds from each gun in completion of their annual target-practice. In the afternoon, the Squadron exercised at steam tactics, which lasted until supper time, when the vessels remained in three divisions, two cables apart, the ships also being two cables from each other. Shortly after 8 o'clock, the signal was made from the Hercules to re-form into two divisions, a manœuvre which had to be executed by the Shannon and Defence dropping astern and resuming their places in the other two divisions, the Defence's proper station being between the Valiant and Repulse. In executing this manœuvre, however, instead of dropping astern and then starboarding her helm to get into her proper station, the Defence immediately starboarded her helm, without reducing (or, at any rate, not materially) her speed, thereby bringing her bows on to the Valiant. Lieut. H. F. Daubeny, the officer of the watch in the latter vessel, perceiving that a collision was unavoidable, immediately put the Valiant's helm to starboard, so as to avoid the Defence ramming that vessel bows-on, a proceeding which only caused the Defence to strike the Valiant obliquely. When those on board the former ship saw that a collision was imminent, they reversed her engines, but she struck the Valiant on the engine-room compartment. The Valiant was at the time proceeding full-speed ahead, and the Defence full-speed astern, so that the ships did not remain in collision long, but quite sufficiently so to inflict serious damage on each other, the Valiant having her side stove in, many of her plates strained and loosened, the whole of her bulwarks, boats, and davits on the starboard side carried away, Nordenfelt gun forced overboard, accommodation ladder carried away, and various other injuries. The Defence had a hole made in her bow by the collision about 13 ft. long, which immediately caused her foremost compartment to fill; she had also her prow twisted, and carried away jibboom and foretopgallant mast. She managed to get her collision mat overboard, but not sufficiently soon to be of any service or to stop the rush of water, for as soon as the bulkhead is pumped out it fills again immediately. She is now considerably down by the bows. Fortunately no lives were lost on board either ship. The comparatively slight damage caused to the Valiant is attributed to the blow having been sustained in the strongest part of the ship, and to the fact that the first impetus of it was delivered against the Valiant's sheet-anchor. I have previously more than once had occasion to comment on the bad station kept by the ships of the squadron, and in particular the erratic movements of the Defence in keeping station, so that I cannot profess to feel very much surprised at the occurrence of an accident not quite unexpected. I believe Capt. Pollard was in charge of the Defence at the time of the collision, having taken charge of the ship out of the hands of Lieut. R. H. Gubbins, the officer of the watch, a few minutes previously. The Squadron arrived at Berehaven at 3 p.m. the following day, and, in accordance with a signal, a court of inquiry, consisting of the captains of the Hector, Hecate, and Shannon, assembled on board the Defence the moment the Squadron anchored, for the purpose of investigating the causes which led to the collision, and to report to whom blame was attributable. The court sat till half-past 7 o'clock, and drew up their report that night, which was forwarded to the Commander-in-Chief, and was to the effect that the collision was caused by the Defence starboarding her helm at the wrong time, whereby she ran into the Valiant; and that no blame was attributable to those on board the latter ship. Having considered this report, the Admiral determined to remain at Berehaven and try Capt. Pollard by court-martial, rather than proceed to Portsmouth or Plymouth, and incur the necessary publicity and criticism incidental to a court-martial held at a naval port on a captain tried for such a serious offence. To do this it became necessary to nominate Capt. Arthur of the Hector, who had been president of the court of inquiry, president of the court-martial, a matter which might have led to that officer being objected to by Capt. Pollard. It is not as yet known whether the movements of the Squadron will be interfered with by the occurrence of this casualty; but it is manifestly impossible to send the Defence with her sunken bow, and the Valiant, with her battered inside, to Falmouth and Torquay, so probably, if the rest of the Squadron proceed on their cruise, those two ships will be ordered to Plymouth for docking and repairs. A court-martial assembled on board the Valiant yesterday, Capt. Knowles, president, for the trial of Francis McCally, able seaman, of the Hercules, on a charge of striking a ship's corporal. Capts. Kennedy, of the Lord Warden; St. John, of the Repulse; Coms. Halifax, of the Hector, and Rooke, of the Lord Warden; Mr. Perry, Secretary to the Admiralty Superintendent, officiating Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, were the other members. The court found the prisoner guilty, and in consideration of his previous very good conduct, only adjudged him to be imprisoned for two years with hard labour. A second court, consisting of the same officers, with the exception of Capt. St. John, whose place was taken by Com. Bromley of the Hecate, was then formed for the trial of William Carter, private, R.M.L.I., of the Repulse, upon two charges of refusing to obey orders, and behaving with contempt to Capt. McCheane, R.M.L.I., of that ship. The court found the charges not proved, and acquitted the prisoner. A third court was then formed, Capt. H. C. St. John presiding, in lieu of Capt. Knowles, for the trial of Alfred Drew and Thomas Bullen, able seamen of the Valiant, on a charge of desertion. The court found the prisoners guilty of absence without leave, and sentenced the former to six and the latter to nine weeks' imprisonment, with hard labour. We have had nothing but incessant rain ever since our arrival here, so that not many officers have availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting Glengariffe. General regret is felt that such an untoward event as this collision between the Valiant and Defence, and the trial of the captain of the latter for negligence, should have occurred to mar the termination of the cruise of the Reserve Squadron.

Tuesday (later), 7.30 p.m.

A telegram was received to-day by the Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves from the Admiralty directing him to annul the court-martial on Captain Pollard, of the Defence. A general signal has been made to this effect, and directions given for steam to be ready at 5 a.m. to-morrow morning. Our destination is at present unknown, but it is supposed to be Plymouth, and that the Admiralty have disapproved of the attempt to stifle publicity by holding this court-martial here, and have determined that it shall take place at Plymouth. How far the postponement of this court-martial may affect its future legality is a much debated question. General satisfaction is expressed at the decision of the Admiralty in this matter.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson and Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster have both written to the Times on the state of the Navy, and both agree in condemning the callousness of the Admiralty to the real requirements of the Empire, and the blindness of the Whitehall officials to our Naval deficiencies. Sir Spencer Robinson appeals to his countrymen to bring pressure to bear upon the Admiralty, "as with many others I find that the hopes and expectations of seeing a Navy adequate to our wants provided by those who are responsible to the country have gradually died away, and any illusion on the subject, after the treatment it has received for the last two years, is impossible." Such are the views of Sir Spencer Robinson. When we turn to the letter of Mr. Arnold-Forster, we find the couleur-de-rose statements recently made in the House of Commons by Sir T. Brassey and Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, and in the House of Lords by Lord Northbrook, entirely turned inside out, and made to appear of a totally different colour. Unfortunately, the House of Commons is the one place where such statements as those at the head of the Admiralty make, can do infinite harm; for, as Mr. Arnold-Forster very rightly remarks, "long and bitter experience has not even yet convinced the public that official views as to the state of the services are almost invariably wrong, and that a serious emergency has, almost without exception, found us unprepared. It may be that the Navy is at this moment sufficient to fulfil all the duties that may be required of it. If so, its sufficiency and the economy of its administration must be something little short of miraculous. We are now spending eight millions a year less on the sea services than we spent regularly at the beginning of the century." Since then, Mr. Arnold-Forster points out, we have acquired or established five-sixths of our colonies, and have increased our sea-borne trade from 60 to 900 millions, and have become absolutely dependent upon foreign supplies for our food and raw material. Since 1805 every Power in Europe, not to speak of Asia and America, has created a Navy. Even the most insignificant of these can be strong in torpedo-boats, a flotilla of which can sink a fleet of armour-clads. At this moment, too, our great commercial roads are undefended, strategical points like Singapore, Aden, Perim, Hong Kong, the Indian littoral, the West India and South Pacific Islands, being at the mercy of our enemies, their sham defences only creating a false sense of security. "If it be the fact," Mr. Arnold-Forster goes on to say, "that with an expenditure reduced by eight millions we can really insure against risks at least a hundredfold more serious than those to which we were subject at the beginning of the century, we have certainly done a stroke of business for which no praise can be too strong. But such economies are rarely effected in practice, and the tone of the discussions which periodically take place in Parliament makes it somewhat doubtful whether we have been so successful as might appear from these facts. If once the authorities would get clean out of their heads the idea that recriminations between successive administrations as to which has done least are of any sort of interest or importance to the country at large, a great step would have been made, and it would be possible to feel sanguine that the real question of the efficiency of the British Navy was in measurable distance of being reached. At present, I believe I am rightly interpreting the enormous amount of concurrent testimony which is obtainable on this matter when I say that the plan of burning the candle at both ends, of halving the estimates and doubling the work, has not succeeded, and that the Navy is at this moment altogether insufficient for the protection of the country in the event of a serious maritime war. During the present month we have had a reserve fleet in commission which, with the doubtful exception of two vessels, might as profitably be at the bottom of the sea as on the surface of it. And year after year we are squandering tens of thousands of pounds upon these and similar vessels, which can neither overtake a weaker adversary nor run away from a stronger one. Lord Northbrook has told the House of Lords that, in view of the constant change in the type of gun and the rapid development of torpedo warfare, it is unwise to spend large sums on ironclad shipbuilding. This may be true, but it is hardly a reason why the ships we have should be improperly armed, or why our supply of torpedo-boats, both here and abroad, should be so miserably inadequate as it is. As long as the public is content to rely exclusively upon official Parliamentary views as to the condition of the Navy, I fear there is little chance of improvement. That the nation, if it knew the facts, would refuse to vote money, I, however, refuse to believe. Moreover, I am confident that nowhere outside the official circle does the official view as to the sufficiency of the Navy prevail. Take any dozen officers on the Active List, of whatever rank; 11 out of the 12 will tell you the Navy is insufficient. But officers are prejudiced. Then take any 12 great shipbuilders, any 12 colonial administrators, any 12 independent students of maritime warfare, and I undertake to say that by an equal majority they will declare that the official view is wrong, and that the Navy is insufficient." It will thus be seen that, after many years of incessant work, we are at last succeeding in awakening the country to a real sense of the danger threatening our Empire, through our Naval supremacy being allowed to dwindle away.

Two of the 6-pounder quick-firing, breech-loading guns, the first received in the service, have arrived at Portsmouth for trial by the officers of the Excellent against 2-in. plates on Whale Island. They are 7 ft. in length, and are fitted with hydraulic bell cranks to check recoil. It is intended to fit one of them on board the Sultan, prior to her proceeding to the Firth of Forth to commence her machine-gun experiments.

There is some hope of the ill-fated crew of the merchant steamer Nisero being released by the Rajah of Tenom, now that the Governments of England and Holland have come to an understanding as to the terms to be granted to the Rajah. These have been telegraphed to Acheen, where the Pegasus has been waiting to convey them to the Rajah.

The Royal yacht Osborne, with the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany and the Princess Victoria, Margaret, and Sophia of Germany, arrived in Sheerness Harbour at 8 on Thursday morning, from Flushing; but as the yacht did not hoist the Imperial standard, no salutes were fired. Their Imperial Highnesses landed at Port Victoria Pier, where they were received by Admiral Edward Brydges Rice, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore; Flag Capt. Poland, Capt. Codrington, Col. Berthon, commanding Sheerness Garrison; and Col. Le Mesurier, commanding Royal Engineers at Sheerness. Their Imperial Highnesses left Port Victoria soon after 9 o'clock, by special train for London. The Osborne had a very favourable passage across the North Sea. The Royal travellers arrived at Charing Cross at 10.34, and were received at the terminus by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Prince and Princess Christian, Sir E. Watkin and Lord Brabourne being present on the platform. The Crown Prince and Princess drove to Buckingham Palace.

According to a Parliamentary return there were on Jan. 1, 1884, 28 armoured ships in commission; in reserve, 14 complete, 9 preparing, 4 waiting repair, and 7 building or ordered to be built—total, 62. The unarmoured ships in commission numbered 122; in reserve, 39 complete, 25 preparing, 21 waiting repair, 14 building or ordered to be built—making a total of 221. In addition there are 74 torpedo-boats, viz., 19 first-class, 48 second-class, and 7 wood boats; also four first-class torpedo boats ordered to be built by contract since Jan. 1, 1884. There are also two third-class cruisers not in the sea-going list, but which might be repaired, and 11 composite gun-vessels, that might be repaired at a comparatively small cost for Coastguard service.

Com. H. F. Hughes-Hallett, who served as commander of the Superb at the bombardment of Alexandria and during the Egyptian war of 1882, has been appointed to the command of the Cruiser, one of the vessels of the Mediterranean Squadron, vice Com. Darwin, whose tenure expires on Aug. 1.

The Polyphemus, having been fitted with a new set of boilers and had her underwater torpedo gear readjusted, to enable the projectiles to be discharged when going at high rates of speed, is expected to be ready to make a trial of her machinery at Portsmouth about Aug. 6.

The new cruiser which the Russian Admiralty has commenced constructing on the Neva will be of the most formidable character. It is 333 ft. long, 61 ft. broad, 23 ft. deep, and has a displacement of 7,800 tons. The engines are composed of 8,000 horse-power indicated. The armour will defend only the vulnerable parts of the ship, and will vary from 8 to 10 in. in thickness. Of the 14 guns placed in turrets on the upper deck, four will be of 9-in. calibre, and 10 of 6-in. The cost of the hull will be 2,225,000 roubles, or £222,500, and the machinery £170,000. The vessel is called after Admiral Nakimoff. It will be completed in two years' time.

The First Lord of the Admiralty was entertained at dinner by the members of the Navy Club on Wednesday evening at Willis's Rooms. Admiral A. Cumming was in the chair, supported by the guest, the Earl of Northbrook, and the following visitors:—Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P.; Mr. H. Campbell-Bannerman, Parliamentary Secretary; Mr. Evan M'Gregor, Secretary to the Admiralty; and Col. Percy G. L. Smith, R.E., Director of Works. The members of the club present were Admirals of the Fleet Sir Henry Keppel, Sir Alexander Milne, and Sir Charles J. G. B. Elliot; Admirals Lord Edward Russell, Sir A. Cooper-Key, Lord Alcester, Sir William King Hall, Sir A. Leslie Montgomery, the Right Hon. Sir J. C. Dalrymple Hay, Sir Claude H. M. Buckle, Sir George Willes, Hugh Dunlop, Charles F. Hillyer, H. S. Hillyer, Sir George Richards, and Sir George St. Vincent King; Vice-Admirals the Earl of Clanwilliam, A. W. A. Hood, Charles L. Waddilove, Thomas Saumarez, Sir George Richards, Charles Fellowes, R. Vesey Hamilton, Hon. J. W. Spencer, E. B. Rice, W. Gore Jones, Thomas Cochran, J. Corbett, Phillimore, Sir Leopold Heath, and Henry Boys; Rear-Admirals Sir Frederick Richards, George Tryon, T. Brandreth, Hon. W. J. Ward, Montagu O'Reilly, Sir Michael Culme Seymour, and Algernon Heneage; Capts. Codrington, Sir Lambton Loraine, Long, King, Beaumont, Rowley, Garforth, Verney, Hopkins (Director of Naval Ordnance), Stephenson, Hon. Edward S. Dawson, and Lindsey Brine; Coms. Willis, Webb, Gassiot, St. Clair, and Hoare; and Mr. H. J. Kelly, R.N. (secretary).

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Mr. Caledon Du Pré Alexander died suddenly at 30 Belgrave Square on the 18th inst. The deceased served formerly in the regiment.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). A correspondent writes:—"On Sunday last the Rev. Arthur Robins completed his 11 years in Windsor, as it was on July 20, 1873, that he took over the spiritual command of the Windsor garrison. The onerous character of his work will be understood when we say that during these 11 years he has scarcely been absent from his post; he has in that period restored one church and built another, and has preached just upon 2,800 sermons. On Sunday morning an immense congregation gathered from every quarter, and met at Holy Trinity Church to celebrate the eleventh anniversary of his coming. The Blues and the 2nd Batn. of the Coldstream Guards came together, and a general congregation, as large as it was influential, helped to fill to overflowing every corner of the church."

5th Lancers. Lieut. Kennedy is about to retire.

6th Dragoons. The Natal Mercury of the 17th inst. says:—"Yesterday morning 100 men of the Inniskilling Dragoons arrived in town from the camp at Pinetown to proceed to Etshowe. They left Pinetown at 8·30, and arrived here at 10.30, under the command of Capt. Cross. They were played into town by the splendid band of the regiment, and as they proceeded up West Street, and down Field Street, the fine appearance of the men and the spirited music of the band attracted a large concourse of people." Capt. Tye has met with an accident in Natal, his horse having fallen with him and crushed his leg. By last accounts he was making satisfactory progress, though some time must elapse before he is fit to resume duty.

11th Hussars. The Liverpool Courier understands that:—"The 11th Hussars will be the last cavalry stationed at Rupert Lane Barracks, and that the next detachment will be quartered in the new cavalry barracks at Seaforth. The Rupert Land Barracks have only been temporary, though in use since 1869. The cavalry detachments that have occupied them have been from the 15th Hussars, 4th Dragoon Guards, 5th Dragoon Guards, 7th Dragoon Guards, 12th Lancers, 7th Hussars, 1st Dragoon Guards, 5th Dragoon Guards, 20th Hussars, 1st Dragoons, 18th Hussars, 2nd Dragoon Guards, and 11th Hussars. Between the 15th Hussars' occupation and that of the 4th Dragoon Guards, Rupert Lane was occupied by infantry detachments. Out of the 28 cavalry regiments of the line 12 have had troops or squadrons at Rupert Lane,—one, the 5th Dragoon Guards, being twice there."

17th Lancers. Gen. J. C. Hope Gibsone, colonel of the regiment, of Pentland, Midlothian, died on the 18th inst., at his residence, Redcross Lodge, Leamington. He was the only son of the late Major-Gen. D. A. Gibsone, and was born in 1810. He was educated at Harrow and Edinburgh, and entered the Army as a cornet in the 7th Dragoon Guards in 1830. He was promoted to a lieutenancy in 1833, became captain in 1835, and major in 1845. He served throughout the Kaffir war of 1846-7, and was present on almost every occasion in which the troops were engaged with the enemy. He also had the command and led the charge of cavalry in the decisive affair of Gwanga, in June, 1846, when a large body of the enemy was encountered and utterly defeated. His services on this occasion were warmly acknowledged in the public despatches, and his name was particularly mentioned in general orders. He obtained the rank of lieut.-col. in 1847, became colonel in 1854, and was promoted to general rank in 1862. He was in command of the cavalry depôt at Newbridge from 1854 to 1856, at Canterbury from 1857 to 1860, and at Maidstone from 1860 to 1862. From 1868 till 1875 he was colonel of the 8th Hussars, and since the latter date he had held the colonelcy of the 17th Lancers. He was placed on the Retired List in 1880. Gen. Gibsone, who was a magistrate and a deputy-lieutenant for Midlothian, married, in 1835, Jane Louisa, only daughter of Mr. H. S. Bringloe, and was left a widower in 1881. Capt. Neild has been appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir G. H. S. Willis, at Portsmouth.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Col. Le Cocq succeeds Col. Williams in command of the Artillery in Ireland, his place in Canada being taken by Col. Hill, lately commanding the Auxiliary Artillery, Western Division.

Lieut. A. E. Hay, R.H.A., is lying in a state of extreme danger at the Barracks, Woolwich, in consequence of injuries caused by his horse falling with him on Thursday. He has not recovered consciousness since the accident.

A statement setting forth the grievances of quartermasters and ridingmasters in the Royal Artillery is under consideration both at the Horse Guards and the War Office. The hardships complained of are the exception of quartermasters and ridingmasters from the increments of retired pay provided by Royal Warrant for all other officers of the Army; the allowance of only half service while in the ranks, while whole service is allowed to reckon for paymasters; the restriction of promotion to the rank of captain and the reduction of pay, which is held to be at variance with the official recruiting posters. It is pointed out that the Royal Artillery quartermasters are at considerable disadvantages in comparison with those of cavalry, infantry, and engineers, and that the terms of the Warrant render the maximum emoluments unattainable by requiring 20 years' commissioned service, and limiting the age to 55. The entire absence of good-service rewards, which are freely given in other branches of the service, is also commented upon, and, amongst other claims, it is contended that quartermasters ought to be allowed, as paymasters are, 1s. per day in lieu of a soldier servant. Finally, it is contended that the intentions of the Legislature, and the repeated promises of the authorities, entitle the claims of the quartermasters and ridingmasters of the Royal Artillery to urgent and favourable consideration.

The death is announced from Murree of Lieut. E. A. F. H. Day. The deceased had only three years' service, and was a strong and hearty man, but has fallen a victim to typhoid fever.

The following are the rules under which officers are allowed to join the Ordnance Store Department:—When a vacancy occurs it may be filled by the appointment of a Royal Artillery officer of five years' service and upwards, to the rank of Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance. He is appointed for one year on probation, during which year he draws the pay of his departmental rank, viz., 12s. 6d. per diem, but is permitted to continue wearing the uniform of the Royal Artillery. When seconded in his regiment (after three months' service in the Department) he is (if a subaltern) granted the temporary rank of captain in the Army. The appointment is for five years, renewable for another five. At the close of ten years' service he must elect either to return to his regiment or to permanently join the department, resigning his combatant commission. At the expiration of the probationary year he must provide himself with the uniform of the Department, which, however, is easily altered from the Royal Artillery uniform, the greatcoat being the only item which will not bear alteration. New belts, both dress and undress, are necessary. On joining the Department, the new-comers are placed at the bottom of the Roster for Foreign Service. The latter is also very limited in the Department—generally five years at Mediterranean, and three at other stations. There is no Indian service. The pay of a D.A.C.G. is increased to 15s per diem after three years' departmental service (probationary period inclusive). The pay of the next rank is 25s per diem. A D.A.C.G. draws allowances at the rates for a staff captain, and, if provided with quarters, is entitled to three rooms and a kitchen. The quarters of the Department are usually very good ones—such as a married officer could live in comfortably. Moreover, an officer's station is generally a fixed one for some years at least. Prospects of promotion in the Department are not very promising at present, but will probably improve in a year or two, when the retirements on account of age begin to take effect. In the higher ranks it is entirely by selection, and the present Commissary-General of Ordnance is an old Artillery officer. At several stations extra pay is granted for the performance of special duties. Officers of the Department are all mounted in time of war, and the ranks below field officer are provided with public service horses and saddlery.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Major A. E. Blair, late of the regiment, died at 17 Priory Hill, Dover, on the 22nd inst., aged 47 years.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Hallowes, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Comdt. of the Deolalee Convalescent Depôt.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Lieut. Hyslop has joined the pay office of the Commissariat and Transport Corps in London, on probation.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. Lieut. Boisragon, 1st Batn., during a game of polo last month at Meerut, collided against Lieut. Staniland, 8th Hussars, and was thrown with great violence to the ground. He was picked up insensible, and conveyed to his bungalow. By latest accounts he was doing well. Lieuts. Herbert and Ryall are candidates for the Indian S.C.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. The 1st Batn. will leave Malta for Egypt about the 1st prox.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. This battalion was inspected by Major-Gen. Feilding at Aldershot on the 18th inst. The General expressed himself highly pleased with the battalion, thanked the officers for their great attention to their men, and alluded in high terms to the exertions of Col. Gildea during his command, and reminded the men that they would have the misfortune soon to lose him, as his command expires about the end of August.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. The following appeared in regimental orders, 1st Batn., on July 8, at Portland:—"It is with the deepest sorrow that the officer commanding makes known to the battalion the death of Capt. T. E. G. Molyneux, which took place in Egypt on July 4, whither he had gone to assist in the reorganisation of the Egyptian Army. By this sad event the regiment has to deplore the loss of a thorough soldier and a most capable officer, one who by the strict performance of his duty won the respect and admiration of his seniors, and was equally endeared and beloved through his geniality and kindness of disposition to those who were under his command, whom he spared no pains to help, and with whose trials and troubles he deeply sympathized. The usual mourning will be worn by the officers for one month from this date."

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Lieut. Helbert, 1st Batn., now in England, joins the depôt at Wrexham.

26th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). Major Mecham has resigned the adjutancy of the Dumbartonshire R.V., and will join his battalion at Aldershot on the 1st prox.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Rich is a candidate for the Indian S.C.

37th Hampshire Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embarked at Portsmouth on Wednesday in the hired transport Hankow for Malta, after having previously been inspected by Gen. Sir G. Willis on the jetty in the dockyard. The strength of the battalion was 21 officers, one warrant officer, 45 serjeants, 16 drummers, 949 rank and file, 54 women, and 63 children. The regiment will arrive at Malta about the 1st prox., to relieve the 1st Batn. 19th.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. The Whitehall Review says:—"Among the many officers who fell in South Africa during the recent campaigns against the Kaffirs and Zulus, few will be better remembered than the gallant Col. Frederick Weatherley, of Weatherley's Horse, who, after rendering really valuable services in Wood's column, fell at the head of his regiment in the fierce engagement at Inyezana. His elder son, Rupert, was killed in the same action a few minutes after his father had fallen. As the late Col. Weatherley was also at one time a well-remembered adjutant of the Carabineers, and an officer who had done good service in the Crimea and during the Indian Mutiny, it should interest many of his old comrades to learn that his younger son, Cecil Poulett Weatherley, has successfully passed his examination for a commission from the ranks, and is gazetted from a serjeantcy in the 57th to a lieutenancy in the 38th South Staffordshire Regt. Young Weatherley's case is the more noteworthy as he had failed to pass for Sandhurst, and had enlisted with a view to gaining his promotion in the crowd of young gentlemen who now-a-days take the shilling with similar views. His promotion was made the subject of quite an ovation in his old regiment."

41st Welsh Regiment. When we heard from Natal, the regiment had received orders to proceed from Fort Napier to Greytown.

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. Conolly, R.M.A., recently serving with the Marine battalion at Suakim, having been invalided home, will be replaced by Capt. Swinburne, of the same corps. Lieut. Marchant, of the R.M.L.I., will succeed Lieut. De M. Roche, who has also been invalided from Suakim.

52nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Should the services of the 49th Regt., now at Gibraltar, be required in Egypt, it is expected that it will be relieved by the 52nd from Limerick.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. Lieut. Gordon, a probationer, officiating wing-officer of the 32nd Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from May 13.

55th Border Regiment moved on Tuesday from Newry to Dublin.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. The Natal Witness says:—Orders have been telegraphed to Capetown on June 14, to despatch the 58th Regt. to Natal. Some 500 men will accordingly embark to-day (June 17), and will arrive at Durban towards the end of the week.

63rd Manchester Regiment. The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Major-Gen. Gipps, &c., made an inspection of the regiment at the Tower on Saturday last. His Royal Highness expressed satisfaction with the state of the regiment.

67th Hampshire Regiment. Lieut. Johnson is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 14th Madras N.I., on probation.

74th Highland Light Infantry. The Western Daily Mercury says:—"When the Artillery Volunteers leave Devonport the north block of the Raglan Barracks will be handed over to Col. Straghan, C.B., and the officers and men of the 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry. The news, if correct, will be hailed with the greatest satisfaction by the corps, as ever since they came to the West from Egypt in February, 1883, they have been divided, a fact not conducive to good discipline or contented minds, seeing that some men have to walk from Devonport to Millbay Barracks or the Citadel invariably twice, and sometimes three times, daily."

76th West Riding Regiment. The annual athletic sports took place at Tipperary on the 17th inst. The entries for the various events were numerous, and the sports were, on the whole, excellent. Col. Allardice, Capt. Trench, and Lieut. Price superintended the whole of the arrangements, which were admirably carried out. The band played a selection of music during the afternoon, under Bandmaster Gray. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Allardice in the presence of the élite of the county, immediately after the termination of the sports.

79th Cameron Highlanders. During the absence on leave of Lieut.-Col. Campbell to Sept. 8, Major Money will perform the duties of Assistant Military Secretary in Egypt.

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The regiment has started a monthly wapenshaw, to promote efficiency in shooting. Great interest was taken in the meeting of June 10, as two of the events were open to the Etshowe column—viz., the officers' and the all-comers' matches. Both these were won by the Highlanders, but representatives of other corps obtained places in both, Surg.-Major Rae and Lieut. Yollond showing good shooting in both matches, while Ptes. Morgan, Davis, and Downey, of the 41st, won prizes in the all-comers' competition. The following is a list of the winners:—Officers' Match—Lieut. Scott, 1; Lieut. Vallancey, 2. All-comers'—Colour-Serjt. Bethune, 1; Serjt. Pirie, 2; Pte. Morgan (41st), 3; Piper Malcolm, 4; Pte. Napier, 5; Corpl. Campbell, 6; and 16 others. Marksmen—Serjt. 102nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers. Lieut. Gallenga has been appointed a deputy-assist.-qrmr.-gen., on probation, and ordered to Aldershot.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Major Woodward completes his period of service as adjt. of the 4th Batn. on Thursday next.

Rifle Brigade. Capt. Hervey, 3rd Batn., will shortly be appointed to the adjutancy of the 24th Middlesex R.V. Major and Pymr. Croker-King, 3rd Batn., has been ordered to Dublin for duty in the Chief Paymaster's Office. A committee of paymastership will be formed.

Chaplains' Department. A correspondent writes:—"I remember having seen some time since in the columns of your paper a correspondence on the subject of army chaplains' uniform. One correspondent held that it was unnecessary and undesirable to give to chaplains any dress other than that of their clerical calling. Another, on the contrary, insisted that they should have a special costume, and should be made (I don't think he quite said) to sleep in it. I do not purpose to enter upon this thorny and delicate question,—'Fools rush in,' &c. There is, however, a point which the advocate for uniform did not take into consideration; and yet it is, I think, worthy of notice. What would he say to a case in which a poor soldier is reported for passing a chaplain in uniform without saluting him, is duly 'had up,' and pleads bonâ fide in excuse that he mistook the reverend 'officer'—complainant—for a police inspector? If this is what comes of chaplains' uniform, does he think the game is worth the candle?"

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Eastern Division, Royal Artillery. "A Suffolk Civilian" writes:—"In your account of the disbanding of our County Artillery Brigade (the 3rd, Eastern Division, R.A.), I am astonished to read the statement that the dwindling-down in the number of recruits is owing to the dislike of the men to the discomforts of camp life. Sir, no man is more patient of hardship and of fatigue than the labourer of Suffolk; no man makes a better soldier. I live among the gunners of the Brigade in their civil life, and I have never heard a complaint from any one of them about 'sleeping in the fields,' or in company with earwigs; but the older soldiers do regret the loss of that grand old English gentleman and scientific officer, Lord Waveney,—'Our father, t'ould kurnel,' as they affectionately call him. It is a general belief throughout the country that the compulsory retirement of his lordship, in all the vigour of his green, old age, was most unpopular with both officers and men, and that this has much to do with the dwindling-down of the Brigade. Were not the men under canvas during the last ten years of the 'old colonel's' command? Do not let the authorities believe that these gunners are feather-bed soldiers, but let them inquire into the true cause of decay. Why, the best professional officers are resigning their commissions. Why, there are no young officers forthcoming from the county to fill the vacancies in the commissioned ranks. There will soon be but one subaltern left. Your correspondent further makes a suggestion which is tantamount to a proposal to create crime, in order that the officers may master their duties on courts-martial. Is he in earnest? An officer of the Brigade, who has just resigned, was an authority on military law, a member of the Middle Temple, a successful instructor, and a writer on courts-martial. Surely, a few hours' instruction from their brother-officer would have relieved the officers of the brigade from the stigma of utter 'ignorance of their duties' much more satisfactorily than the legal vivisection of 'horrid examples' in the shape of prisoners."

Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment). The 3rd Batn. (2nd Royal Surrey) will bring to a close to-day a most successful training on Merrow Downs, Guildford, where it has been encamped for 28 days. The inspection took place on Wednesday and Thursday, Col. Lynch, commanding the Regimental District, being the inspecting officer. On Wednesday the kits were examined, and some few of the subalterns called upon to drill companies. On Thursday the battalion paraded in eight strong companies at 10.30, under Col. Hartnell. The march-past over, a series of movements in close and extended order followed, Col. Hartnell, Majors Davis, Ritchie, and Lloyd, and Capt. Webster handling the battalion. The manœuvres from beginning to end were most creditably performed, and demonstrated the wisdom of the decision of the regimental authorities to devote the month's work to steady drill at head-quarters, instead of wasting time on the Fox Hills or in the Long Valley at Aldershot. Col. Lynch expressed himself highly pleased with the result of his inspection.

Royal Sussex Regiment. There was a large gathering at Chichester on Thursday afternoon to witness the presentation of new colours to the 4th Batn., commanded by the Earl of March. The company present included the Duchess of Richmond and Gordon and the Ladies Gordon Lennox, the Countess of March, Lord Henry Gordon Lennox, M.P., Lord Walter Gordon Lennox, and the Bishop and the Dean of Chichester. The religious portion of the ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Chichester, and the colours were presented by Lady March, on whose behalf Lord Henry Lennox addressed the regiment, expressing a hope that the colours would never be unfurled except in the cause of justice and freedom.

South Lancashire Regiment. The Liverpool Courier has the following:—"The militia encamped at Altcar complain that the Liverpool public do not take much interest in them. This is to a great extent the fault of the authorities, who do not give the press information as to the dates of inspection, &c. The South Lancashire were presented with new colours during the recent training, but the exact date of this attractive ceremony was unknown a few days previously. Some years ago we tried to obtain the date of one of the militia inspections, and the reply was, 'We don't know ourselves, but think it will be either Wednesday or Thursday.' The annual inspection of the Brigade of Guards was until this year witnessed by a score or two of spectators. This year the date was almost for the first time communicated a fortnight beforehand to the press, and the result was that a brilliant assemblage, including members of both Houses of Parliament, attended at Hyde Park on the 11th inst. to show their interest in the Guards."

York and Lancaster Regiment. In noticing the retirement of Major Raikes, the Sentinel, the regimental paper of the Honourable Artillery Company, says:—"Major Raikes joined the regiment in 1869, serjeant-instructor of musketry 1872, instructor of musketry 1879. Major Raikes' military service is by no means restricted to the H.A.C., he being senior capt. of the 3rd Batn. York and Lancaster Regt. He holds a captain's and field officer's certificate from the School of Instruction, and has also passed in tactics, in addition to having a 1st-class certificate from the School of Musketry at Hythe. In his civil capacity he is entitled to the following letters—F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.S.S., F.R.His.S., and is also corresponding member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, and member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, in addition of being the author of the following works:—1, 'History of the H.A.C.'; 2, 'Historical Records of the 1st Regiment of Militia'; 3, 'History of our Reserve Forces'; 4, 'Strength and Cost of British Army and Reserve Forces'; 5, 'Militia Reform.' Major Raikes, for the elaborate and interesting history of the H.A.C. alone, deserves the thanks of every member of the regiment, and although he has retired into the Veterans at such an early period of his career, he has by this voluminous and valueable work left a mark in the regiment which will never be effaced. He has several times served on the Court of Assistants, and has never lost any opportunity of furthering the interests of the regiment of which he is so distinguished a member."

A British officer, now in New York, writes as follows concerning the new American dynamite gun:—"I went on June 23 to see some experiments with the much-talked-of dynamite gun at Fort Hamilton, on the Long Island side of the Narrows. The gun, which rests upon a light tripod that raises it some ten feet from the ground, is made of brass, and has a length of 40 feet and a bore 4 inches in diameter. At the breech there is an apparatus by means of which air under pressure is admitted to the gun. This will propel the shot for a distance of from two to five miles. The projectile is six feet long, and is a light wooden cylinder, to one end of which is attached a hollow brass percussion shell, containing 15 lbs. of dynamite. In the rear there is a felt wad to stop the windage. They seemed to make tolerably good practice with the weapon, which was worked by only three men; and after each discharge we saw a great puff of smoke and a splendid shower of rocks and shingle when the shell burst. But the gun is very cumbersome, and would afford a capital target for an enemy to aim at. It may do for harbour defence; but it must be considerably modified before it can fulfil the prophecies of its inventors and revolutionise the art of war."

On Thursday, in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, the marriage of the Hon. L. White (Scots Guards), eldest son of Lord Annaly, with the Hon. Lilah Agar-Ellis, only daughter of the late Viscount Clifden, and sister of the present peer, was celebrated by special licence. The centre aisle was lined by 46 non-commissioned officers and men of the bridegroom's company in the Scots Guards. Mr. H. Wickham (Scots Guards) acted as best man.

WHATEVER may be the final result of the Langson affair, it is remarkable to see what serious charges are brought by the French Press against General Millot; and certainly, if half these accusations are well founded, it will be difficult for the French Government not to relinquish entirely its claim for an indemnity. One statement is that the Chinese Government warned the French Government that it was very uncertain if it could enforce the evacuation of Langson, and that this information was telegraphed to General Millot for his guidance. And yet, as the Armée Française remarks, the General took no trouble to feel his way. The Débats says that when the first news of the ambush of Langson arrived, it was hard to say which excited the most astonishment,—the duplicity of the Chinese, or the simplicity of General Millot in allowing his troops to be surprised. In the opinion of the writer, General Millot is condemned by his own report, and cannot plead that he was acting on the faith of treaties as an excuse. "When," he asks, "has one seen a treaty, an armistice, or even a suspension of hostilities carried out without the Generals on both sides entering into communication and arranging details? These elementary principles of practical military law are taught not only in the superior military schools, but to non-commissioned officers." The Débats is much afraid that this blunder will damage the rising prestige of France in the far East.

When the Duke of Cambridge last visited the Royal Military College, his attention was called to the tablets recently erected in the Church to the memory of the cadets who fell in the Crimea and in South Africa. The tablets, 6 ft. by 4 ft. 6 in., are composed of alabaster and costly marbles. It is intended, as funds permit, to erect tablets to commemorate "The Indian Mutiny" and "Afghanistan." It is hoped that the parents, friends, and brother-officers of those to whose memory the tablets have been, or will be erected, will assist, the Chaplain receiving subscriptions. The execution of the tablets has been placed in the hands of Messrs. Bayne and Co., Millbank Street.

The Riding Troop, Royal Military College, has been ordered to Aldershot for a course of musketry.

Nothing is as yet settled with regard to the filling of the vacant honorary colonelcy of the 17th Lancers, for which the names of General H. R. Benson and Lieutenant-General W. T. Dickson are mentioned. General Benson, who is at present at the head of the 7th Hussars, passed the greater part of his service in the 17th Lancers, joining the regiment as a cornet in 1840; commanding a troop in it from 1845 to 1854; and subsequently commanding the regiment from 1856 to 1862, when he went on half-pay. Lieutenant-General Dickson, who has seen no active service, passed his entire regimental service from 1847 to 1870 in the 16th Lancers. Another old 17th Lancer with claims based on a long and distinguished connection with the regiment is Major-General White, commanding the Colchester district. He passed all his regimental service in it, from 1847 to 1866, and was with it at the Alma, Balaclava, and before Sebastopol.

Lord Straithnairn, Sir Drury Lowe, and Baker Pasha went down to Aldershot on Wednesday, and witnessed a parade of the Cavalry and Horse Artillery in the Long Valley.

An interesting "electric demonstration" took place in the vicinity of the Cambridge Hospital, Aldershot, on the night of Thursday last, when Baron Munday, General of the Austrian Army Medical Department, exhibited his ambulances, in which the electric light is utilised for affording aid to the wounded on a battle-field at night. The stretcher and bearer columns of the Army Hospital Corps were employed as in war on a mimic battle-field by the aid of the electric light, and everything worked smoothly and without a hitch.

Sites for cholera camps have been selected at the Camp, Aldershot.

Herr Hessling, of 11 Fürstenstrasse, Leipsig, has sent us some photographs of the Kaiser and his Generals, &c., at the manœuvres near Homburg last year, which we find very spirited and interesting. It may appear unwarrantable to use the word spirited to a photographer, but it is quite true that the results of a sitting or a focussing may be made tame or animated just in proportion to the skill of the photographer, who may be a mere mechanic or an artist. One photo of a section of a company firing is very good—every man is fixed at the moment, and yet officers and soldiers are lifelike and alive. There is another very characteristic group of the Emperor on horseback with two of his staff and two equerries, and a background of men, women, and children cheering as you see they are, and waving their umbrellas, hats, and handkerchiefs vigorously. Another has just caught the Prince of Wales in the uniform of the Blucher Hussars, the Crown Princess, Count Eulenberg, some ladies on horseback, and a group of Staff and foreign officers at the close of one of the day's manœuvres. There is a third, which would be more valued here, perhaps, than it would be in Germany,—the Crown Prince in uniform, mounted on his favourite charger, and close at hand his wife, "the daughter of England," in a riding-habit, sitting her horse firmly and well. In fact, the series, as far as we have been able to judge, is one which would find admirers and purchasers in this country, as well as in Prussia and the Fatherland.

The late Control Department was generally held up to ridicule, on account of the multifarious duties its officers were supposed to be acquainted with. Now, in regard to the Commissariat and Transport Staff, an officer joins from a regiment, and is forthwith posted to, say, barrack work. He has time to imperfectly learn something of the nomenclature of the stores entrusted to his charge, when he is suddenly ordered on active service and appointed to the charge of Commissariat supplies, of which, of course, he is entirely ignorant. Or perhaps he is able to ride, in which case he may be put to transport duties, being a sort of interchangeable unit between cavalry, infantry, or departmental duties. A conductor is detailed to assist the general-utility man, but it often happens that a transport conductor knows nothing of supply work, and vice versâ. It is time that serious attention was given to the proper conduct of the administration of such important services as Supply and Transport.

A successor to Lieutenant-Colonel Lukin, Staff Paymaster, who retired some weeks ago, has not yet been gazetted. An interval of a week between the retiring of one man and the announcement of his successor's name in the Gazette would meet all the necessities of the case.

On the amalgamation of the Royal and Indian Armies, the officers of the Indian Artilleries and Engineers were promised all their old rights and privileges if they volunteered for Imperial service. Accordingly, they volunteered nearly en masse. Some few years ago, in order to make their pensions something akin to those who remained "local," a scheme was brought out by which it was decreed by warrant that an officer who had been seven years a major might retire on his pension and extra annuity, but should he be promoted, say, in six years, 11 months, and 30 days, he was to lose his chance of pension until he had served a further five years as Lieutenant-Colonel. The injustice of this rule is apparent, as an officer who wished to retire was prevented doing so by the chance of his being promoted one day too soon, while his junior in service and rank could retire the next day on a much larger pension. The India Office lately recognised this injustice, and generously proposed to the War Office to abolish the rule, and instead to allow officers, after attaining certain time service, whatever their rank, to retire on their pensions and extra annuities, but for months the War Office have apparently shelved the matter. We fail to see why the War Office object to the scheme. They do not find the money. That comes from the India Office, who proposed the necessary and just alteration. The War Office surely see the injustice of the rule. Besides, it gives them one more means of causing a flow in the promotion of the Royal Artillery, which is none too fast now, and a long way behind the Line regiments generally.

The Annual Divisional Race Ball, Aldershot, was held at the Officers' Club on Friday night. Upwards of 500 officers and ladies were present.

The arrival of the 35th Regiment at Assouan seems to have caused something of a sensation. The battalion had to wend its way in single file through the bazaars, and the steady tramp of the British soldier, combined with the thunder of the drums, seems to have answered the same purpose as Joshua's trumpets, and blown down the walls of the town. Crocodiles, ostrichs' eggs, and all those curiosities dear to the British tourist, with other zoological specimens less appreciated, appeared to be startled from the dusty old shelves and bombarded Tommy Atkins as he passed, to the good-natured amusement of both actors and onlookers. The fixing of bayonets was, indeed, looked upon for a moment as a serious proceeding, and the population, deeming the situation critical, were inclined to make a sudden bolt for it; but the cheerful demeanour of Tommy Atkins, who, fresh from Mangabat, would welcome transportation to far warmer climes than Assouan as a relief, reassured the native mind.

The French papers give an account of an interesting experiment made with cavalry, by order of the War Minister. Seven officers of the 9th Army Corps, 2nd Chasseurs, were told off to execute a raid. They were given a week for training themselves and their horses. They started on June 30, at 2 a.m., from Tours, and at 8 o'clock they reached Châtellerault (69 kilomètres). After reposing for an hour, they started for Poitiers, where they arrived half an hour after noon (33 kilomètres),—total, first day, 102 kilomètres. The next day, 82 kilomètres were performed between 1 a.m. and 10.30 a.m. On the night of July 2, at 12.30, the party started for Angers, and, after making a long halt at Chemillé, reached their destination at 11.30 a.m. On July 3, they left Angers for Tours (108 kilomètres), and passed through Saumar at 4.20 a.m., the officers of the cavalry school of that place turning out to give them the accolade. At 9 a.m., they reached Langeais, where they breakfasted with General Schmitz, who commands the 9th Army Corps, and who was able to judge of the result of the experience. At 10 a.m. the seven were once more in the saddle, and at 12.20 they reached Tours, where General L'Hotte, Inspector-General of Cavalry, was able to see that the horses were perfectly sound. The officers in question had accomplished 400 kilomètres, or about 300 miles, in 82 hours 20 minutes, and that in very hot weather. It is said that this experiment is to be repeated on a larger scale, and not only with officers.

The Pall Mall Gazette of July 21 calls itself to make up its mind to hear that Assouan is cut off as much as Khartoum before August, and that between Assouan and Cairo there "is no position" it "can call" its "own." Poor Pall Mall Gazette! Of course, the paper, writing editorially, uses the word "our" as to mind and position. Now, "we" will undertake to eat the Pall Mall Gazette, editor, staff, and all on the day before August when Assouan is cut off from Cairo.

The French Government has announced its intention of filling up the vacancies, due to various causes, in the Tonquin Expeditionary Force. It appears that 1,100 men belonging to the 15th and 16th Army Corps are to sail at the end of the month for the seat of operations. In addition to this, Vincennes is busy preparing to despatch some more matériel in the shape of two batteries of artillery, or 80 guns, 160 men, and 85 horses. The gunners will accompany the infantry. The French papers which make this announcement add:—"It appears that the pacification of Tonquin is not so simple as the Government would have us believe, and that our conquest on the banks of the Red River is destined to cost us more men and more money."

The military authorities in Bermuda do not appear to be very well read in the drill-books, or to have a high opinion of the horsemanship of the mounted officers quartered there. The following orders were recently issued for the Queen's Birthday parade:—"After the inspection the commanding officers and other mounted officers will take post in rear, and a feu-de-joie will be fired." It was remarked that the General and his Staff did not care to trust themselves even in rear of the line, as they were conspicuous by their absence.

The Avenir Militaire publishes a letter which throws a strong light on the difference between the military systems in France and Germany. Writing from Homburg, a French correspondent expresses his astonishment on seeing a German company 110 strong, while the French companies cannot muster more than 40 or 50 rank and file. And yet, if one refers to the War Estimates, one sees that there are more foot soldiers in France than in Germany. It must, however, be borne in mind that in the French estimates a number of men are counted which are not counted in the German estimates, and that France employs a number of foreign and Algerian troops, which swell the estimates, but not companies at home. In addition to this, in France there are 2,914 companies of 83 men, peace establishment—for Chasseurs 115, and for Zouaves 149—while Germany has only 2,012 companies 113 strong. In fact, in Germany there are real companies, and in France only skeletons.

The following was notified in divisional orders at Aldershot yesterday:—"The Lieutenant-General commanding has much pleasure in notifying that his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has expressed great satisfaction at the talent and zeal shown by the under-mentioned officers and non-commissioned officers in compiling a military map of the ground available for manœuvres in the vicinity of Aldershot:—Captain Verner, Rifle Brigade; Captain Kentish, 26th Cameronians; Lance-Corporal Roberts, 39th Dorsetshire; Corporals Damson and Langford, 26th Cameronians; Sergeant Clarke, 7th Hussars; Lance-Serjeant Hare, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Lance-Serjeant Henderson, 39th Dorsetshire; Lance-Serjeant Hardisty, 73rd Highlanders; Lance-Corporal Ward, 15th Hussars; and Lance-Corporal McKenzie, 26th Cameronians."

There have been reports in France that, owing to the cholera, there would be no autumn manœuvres this year in France. This report is correct only so far as the 15th Army Corps, which lies in the infected district, is concerned. We may add that the grand artillery manœuvres at the camp of Châlons have just terminated. The Progrès Militaire, while lavishing encomiums on the branch in question, condemns these manœuvres as of no practical utility, on the ground that artillery never acts alone. A German critic, who says that the artillery holds the first rank in the French Army, had little or nothing to find fault with. He thought the animals rather too heavy in the horse artillery, which consequently was wanting in rapidity,—a very essential matter.

Captain Burnett Greive Hall (p.s.c.), R.M.A., having completed his period of Staff service as Instructor in Tactics at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, has been appointed Garrison Instructor at the Depôt, Fermoy.

Lieutenant C. G. Matson, R.M.L.I., who has been a probationer for the Indian Staff Corps since October 17, 1882, has been permitted by the Admiralty to revert to his old corps from the date of his arrival in England, viz., the 16th inst., and to be attached to the Plymouth Division.

Algerine, Com. Fullerton, was in the River Parana on June 23, and will leave for Rio de Janeiro so as to arrive by Aug. 1.

Amethyst, Capt. Brent, senior officer on the South-East Coast of America, was at Monte Video on June 23.

Arab, Com. Stopford, was at Aden on July 8; the Ranger left Aden for Obokh, Tejourah, Zeyla, and Berbera on July 3, and has since returned.

Canada, Capt. Francis Durrant, having on board Prince George of Wales, left the North American station for England on Saturday.

Dwarf, Lieut. and Com. Millet, arrived at Plymouth on July 25.

Hecla, Capt. Wilson, left Portland for Portsmouth on July 23, the torpedo flotilla having dispersed the same day, the boats returning to their several posts.

Helicon, Lieut. and Com. Winslow, flying the flag of Admiral the Lord John Hay, was at Alexandria up to July 14, when the Inflexible, Monarch, Invincible, and Express were with the flag. The Alexandra and Cygnet were at Port Said, and the Iris was at Suez.

Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, arrived at Cowes to act as guardship during the Queen's stay at Osborne on July 20, but left on July 24 to rejoin the Channel Squadron.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., was at Bonne Bay on July 19, when the Canada left for England.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, was at Cape Coast Castle on June 10. The Starling arrived there from Ascension on June 4, and the Flirt from England on the 8th. The Alecto and Stork were also awaiting Opal's arrival. A correspondent writes:—"On June 11, Opal, Flirt, Alecto, and Starling left in company under steam, and arrived at Accra the same evening, going through a few steam tactics on the way down. The Stork brought on the mail of May 19 to Accra on the 12th. On 13th, Starling, which has been ordered home, left for Cape Coast to meet her relief, Forward. It is rather a mystery to us why the Starling is going home, as she has not been two years in commission yet, and all her crew are fit. The Stork left same day for Loanda, to relieve the Goshawk on South Sub-division, taking with her the monument sent out in Flirt, for Leeke's grave, who was drowned at Mayumba last year. The Opal and Alecto left for a cruise to leeward, arriving at Quittah next day. The Flirt remained at Accra. A steamer arrived at Quittah next day (15th) bringing news that Consul Hewett was on his way out, so orders were sent by Alecto to Flirt at Accra, to proceed to Bonny to take Consul on his rounds, and she (Flirt) was to leave Accra on June 17 for that purpose. The Opal is to return to Accra on June 19. The Squadron, or rather as many vessels as can be mustered except Alecto, will go for a three months' cruise together next month. The Alecto are anxiously looking for news of the Wye, leaving England with their new crew, for she was supposed to do so on June 1. The Alecto will be very glad to get away from the detestable Bights, which they have been in continuously, since the ship arrived on the station a year ago, excepting her run to the Gambia to meet the Commander-in-Chief in February, and I don't think they are being relieved a day too soon, for all hands are weak, though not really ill. They have lost about a dozen white men, invalided, and two have died since the Niger expedition. Lieut. Harston, however, takes every care of his men, and is very popular both on board and on the station generally. So is Capt. Brooke, than whom it would be difficult to find an officer more liked by all with whom he comes in contact." According to a letter received by the Admiralty, dated July 1, from Capt. Brooke, the following is the proposed programme of movements on the West Coast station between the months of July, August, September, and part of October, of the ships under his command:—Fernando Po, will arrive July 12, and leave on July 16; Ambras Bay, July 16—18; Prince's Island, July 20—22; St. Thomas's Island, July 23—25; Anno Bom, July 27—29; Mayumba, August 2—4; Loango, August 5—6; Landana, August 7—8; Kabenda, August 9—10; Shark's Point, Congo River, August 11—13; St. Paul de Loando, August 15—19; Lobito Bay, August 21—22; Elephant Bay, August 23—Sept. 1; Mossamedis, Sept. 3—5; St. Helena, Sept. 15—26 (a gunboat will remain at St. Helena to bring on to Ascension the mail leaving Cape Town Sept. 24, due at St. Helena Sept. 29); Ascension, Sept. 30—Oct. 10; Cape Coast Castle, Oct. 20.

Osborne, Capt. Thomson, left Portsmouth for Flushing on July 22, to embark their Royal Highnesses the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany, who landed at Sheerness on July 24, on a visit to the Queen.

Ready, Com. Ecklin, left for South-East Coast of America on July 19.

Rifleman, Com. Mayo, was in the River Uruguay on June 23, and will leave for Rio de Janeiro so as to arrive by Aug. 1.

Sphinx, Com. Caffin, flying the broad pendant of Comdre. Molyneux, was at Suakim with the Briton, Condor, Myrmidon, Albacore, and Tyne, on July 21. The Briton would proceed to the East Indies station on relief by the Dolphin; the Superb, Temeraire, Carysfort, Falcon, and Coquette were at Malta; the Grappler at Gibraltar; the Bittern at Constantinople; the Cockatrice in the Danube. The Wanderer arrived at Malta on July 19; would leave July 23, en route to Singapore.

Starling, Lieut. and Com. Sanders, arrived at Madeira on July 19.

Sultan, Capt. Tracey, arrived at Portsmouth on July 23, and left for the Firth of Forth on July 24, having taken on board machine and rapid-firing shell-guns for experimental purposes.

Wrangler, Lieut. and Com. Farr, was at Colonia on June 23, and will leave for Rio de Janeiro so as to arrive by Aug. 1.

H.M.S. BRITANNIA.

Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh presented the prizes to the successful candidates at the final examination of the fourth term on board the Britannia at Dartmouth on Thursday afternoon. His Royal Highness, in distributing the prizes in the presence of a number of distinguished visitors, reminded the cadets that on the last occasion upon which he visited the Britannia he was accompanied by his brother, the Prince of Wales, and that at that time his two nephews were cadets there pursuing their studies. The eldest Prince was now leaving the service, but he felt certain that he would continue to take that interest in the service which his father, the Prince of Wales, and the other members of the Royal Family did. His Royal Highness added that it was a matter of satisfaction to him, as he was sure it would be to all of them, to know that Prince George of Wales had passed the several examinations, and was about to obtain his commission as a lieutenant. It was very satisfactory to think that Prince George had passed these examinations with great credit to himself, having, he was informed, taken 975 marks out of 1,000, and been awarded a first-class certificate. He thought he might fairly place Prince George before them as an example to study hard in order to take the highest honours in the examinations which were before them. His Royal Highness then presented the awards according to the following list:—

Study Subjects—1, clock and barometer, Mr. G. P. W. Hope; 2, despatch-box, Mr. O. de B. Brock.

Seamanship—1, binoculars, Mr. G. P. W. Hope; 2, gold compass, Mr. R. W. Bentinck.

Charts and Instruments—1, case of instruments, Mr. O. de B. Brock; 2, small case of ditto and parallels, Mr. H. E. Holmes-a-Court.

French—1, despatch-box, Mr. C. E. le Mesurier; 2, "La Fontaine's Fables," Mr. J. P. Grenfell.

Essay—1, cabinet of games, Mr. J. P. Grenfell; 2, "Half-Hours with Best Authors," Mr. O. de B. Brock (more than three prizes), Mr. A. R. Raby.

Religious Knowledge—1, Bible, Mr. R. W. Bentinck; 2, Church Service, Mr. D. L. Dent.

Drawing—1, sketching wallet, Mr. A. R. Guest; 2, "Birket Foster's Landscape," Mr. L. H. Webber.

Physics—1, pocket compass, Mr. O. de B. Brock; 2, "Tyndall's Lectures," Mr. A. R. Guest.

The chief captains, Mr. F. G. Loring and Mr. R. W. Bentinck, each received a dirk; Mr. Bentinck also had a prize cricket-bat and Mr Silver a beagle whip.

Capt. Bowden-Smith, on behalf of the officers and cadets, thanked the Duke of Edinburgh for the great honour which his Royal Highness had done them by attending and distributing the prizes on that occasion. He called for three cheers for the Duke, and these having been lustily given and acknowledged, the proceedings terminated. His Royal Highness subsequently witnessed a swimming contest between the cadets, and visited their gymnasium. He afterwards dined with the officers of the Britannia. Of the cadets who took part in the recent examination, Messrs. G. P. W. Hope, A. R. Guest, M. E. Silver, R. W. Bentinck, and J. P. Grenfell are entitled to enter the service as midshipmen.

A trial trip took place last week, at Cronstadt, of the clipper Kreuzer, when the new engines were found to yield nearly double the speed of the old ones removed last autumn. The new ones were constructed at the Government works at Ijora, and work up to 1,510 horse-power. The speed of the vessel is now 13 knots an hour.

The Admiralty have selected Com. the Hon. Foley Vereker for the command of the Rambler, fitting out at Chatham. Com. Vereker has only recently brought home the Magpie from the China station, and was only fifteen months in command of that ship. He will, therefore, be able to complete his three years in the Rambler.

The Admiralty have decided to strengthen the force of Blue-jackets at present at Suakim, in face of the increasing numbers and activity of Osman Digma's followers.

Capt. Buller, Achilles, who served with distinction in the Crimean war, has been appointed a Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Capt. Sir W. Hunt-Grubbe to the rank of Rear-Admiral.

The Active having undergone a thorough refit at Portsmouth and received a new armament of breechloaders, will, it is said, relieve the Diamond on the Australian station.

Headaches and Disordered Stomach.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, Robert Humphreys, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Incorporated under the Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1883. Capital, £50,000, in 10,000 Shares of £5 each. Payable, 5s per share on application, 5s on allotment, and 10s one month after allotment. Further calls may be required at intervals of not less than two months, and not exceeding £1 per share. It is estimated that a capital of £2 per Share will be sufficient to start the Company on its present basis.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the manufacture of pure and cheap ice, and to offer the same to the public at prices which will readily command a market.

The consumption of ice in London is estimated to be upwards of 900,000 tons annually, the greater portion of which is imported from Norway, and the cost of which, including freight, landing, cartage, storage, and other charges, together with an allowance from "melting," averages from 30s to 40s per ton, whilst at the same time the quality is very inferior.

The cost of the ice made by the British Pure Ice Manufacturing Company (Limited) will be about 7s 6d per ton, and as the sale prices average from £2 to £5 per ton, it is evident that the margin of profit for this Company is very large. The means to be adopted by the Company will enable them at all times to guarantee the absolute purity of the ice made.

The process and machinery by which the ice will be produced is that patented and manufactured by Messrs. Pontifex and Wood, and acknowledged by all competent judges to be by far the most reliable and economical apparatus and system which can be adopted, the efficiency of which can be guaranteed, and will be carried out under the immediate supervision of Mr. A. G. Christiansen, the Company's manager, who has had a large experience in this special process.

The works of the Company are intended to occupy a position affording easy access for the supply of the shipping, and facilities for the quick despatch and transit to various parts of London, and to commence operations not later than November 30, 1884.

The full capital will, it is estimated, be sufficient to eventually increase the producing power of the Company to 200 tons per day.

Very satisfactory arrangements have been concluded with the patentees and manufacturers of the Pontifex apparatus, insuring the practical monopoly of the manufacture of ice by this process over the whole metropolitan area, thus placing this Company at a very distinct advantage over all others.

A copy of the terms of this arrangement may be inspected at the Company's Offices.

Commencing business, as this Company will do, unfettered by any expenses whatever, save the actual cost of putting down the plant and with the ability to produce ice at a much lower rate than by any other means which can be employed, the results of the estimates go to prove that after dealing liberally in every way a dividend of at least 15 per cent. per annum may be anticipated, which would probably be increased when the Company, with the same amount of management expenses, are enabled to increase their manufacture and trade.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be inspected at the Offices of the Company, where prospectus and form of application can also be obtained.

Application will be made in due course to the Committee of the Stock Exchange for a quotation.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

Mr. H. A. Illingworth, 82 Queen Street, Batley, March 7, 1884:—"After four years' trial of one of your 25s. watches, I now desire to express my thanks for the same. During all the time I have had it I have not paid one halfpenny for repairs. It is as good to-day as ever. When I have shown it to my friends, they have valued it at double and frequently at treble the money. To those who wish to possess a cheap, good, everyday watch, I especially recommend the above."

CORBETT'S WORCESTERSHIRE SALT.

AGENTS: WESTON and WESTALL, LONDON.

The purest and most wholesome Salt for the Table, and all Culinary and Dairy purposes, and the best for the Preservation of Fish, Meat, and Vegetables, or for any other purposes where Salt of the greatest strength, most brilliant whiteness, utmost purity, and most delicate flavour is required.

Has gained Highest Awards wherever Exhibited.

An important condiment of universal consumption like salt ought not to be purchased without thought or care, as too frequently is the case, but should be selected with the circumspection experience shows to be necessary in all articles of diet, or where intrinsic purity and absolute freedom from foreign matters are of essential importance. These conditions are completely fulfilled by CORBETT'S WORCESTERSHIRE SALT, produced not from water more or less impure, which has passed freely through fissures or otherwise to Salt deposits lying comparatively near the surface, and therefore necessarily exposed to risks of organic contamination, but made from natural brine formed in Nature's laboratory, and drawn from the purest and deepest natural brine springs in England, lying in the same district and the same geological formation which yield the famous spring water of Malvern, the purest water known.

To protect consumers, this Salt is packed for the Table, General Household, and Dairy purposes, in Jars Bottles, Packets, and Calico Bags, from 1lb. to 28lb. each, bearing the name and trade mark of the Proprietor. It is also supplied in squares and other forms for various uses, and for manufacturing purposes.

May be obtained of all Oilmen and Grocers throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS are the best, the cheapest, and the most popular of remedies. The seasons change and circumstances vary, but these remedies can always be used with certainty and with safety. Eruptions, rashes, and all descriptions of skin diseases, sores, ulcerations, and burns are presently benefited and ultimately cured by these healing, soothing, and purifying medicaments. The Ointment rubbed upon the abdomen checks irritation in the bowels, averting and curing diarrhœa and other disorders of the intestines frequently prevailing through the summer and fruit seasons. Heat lumps, blotches, pimples, inflammation of the skin, muscular pains, neuralgic affections, and enlarged glands can be effectively overcome by using Holloway's remedies according to the instructions accompanying every packet.

"Mr. Foster's industry is a standing marvel. His 'Peerage and Baronetage' alone is an undertaking which any individual might be proud to have carried out, and which few could hope to rival...... Mr. Foster here extends his labours beyond the sphere of the titled classes, and having to choose a boundary by which to circumscribe them, now that he has passed beyond that of hereditary rank, has selected the convenient boundary afforded by the possession of a 'Descent' from the Blood Royal of England......It is impossible to turn over all Foster's pages without being struck by the multitude of facts and dates with which the text is everywhere studded."—Morning Post.

AT the time of the Civil War, American inventiveness, combined with the constant quality which puts gun-making and gig-driving in the same category, in some men's minds, deluged the Federal War Office with projects for the construction of novel ordnance. Among these was a scheme for the production of a cannon with recessed chambers along the bore to contain powder charges, which were intended to ignite one after the other as the projectile travelled along the bore, each explosion giving a kick, as it were, to the shot till out it came in a tremendous hurry. That notion was promulgated in 1862 or 1863, and, if we do not mistake, it was worked out in an actual gun, or model of one, which came to nothing, and so there was an end of the matter. Certainly the idea of lodgments for power in the tube of a gun was discussed more than twenty years ago in America, and there is no novelty in such a whim—though there may be some in the application of it. In the Globe of last Saturday, there was, under the heading of "The Hope Gun," an article which may have been a communiqué, or may have been original. The article began with the announcement that "this weapon (i.e., the Hope gun) has at length been brought pointedly to the notice of our artillerists by the submission of the author's ideas and plans to discussion at the United Service Institution." We were told by the Globe that "the Hope gun is on the multi-chamber principle, so constructed as to explode a consecutive series of charges as the projectile travels towards the muzzle, and thus to accelerate its velocity." This seems to be the old American idea. But surely our contemporary ought to have been informed that years ago the Hope gun was "pointedly" thrust at the War Office several years ago, and that proposals were made by the authors of the projected cannon to the Government to purchase their ideas, and to adopt their system holus bolus. The rejection of these offers led to bitter attacks on the authorities. Since then, the "author" of the "ideas and plans" has written lengthily in the pages of a contemporary about them, and has very properly cracked up his gun of the future. If we are not misinformed, he also brought it "pointedly" to the attention of the Ordnance Committee, but he did not produce any "gun," and he did not succeed in satisfying Sir Collingwood Dickson and the other members that his scheme should be adopted by the Government. We know to our cost what a dangerous thing it is to criticise the vagaries of soi-disant gunmakers, or to defend the action of the authorities in resisting the demands of "inventors;" and it was with some satisfaction we heard that in this particular case the makers of the plans and ideas would go to happier lands for their ventilation. It seems, however, that there has been a locus penitentiæ given to the War Office. Colonel Hope has repented of his desperate resolve, announced in print some years ago, that if the Government did not buy him up he would "carry his pigs to another market." They will not be of "pig" iron, at all events, for Colonel Hope, in his lecture, confessed he was in want of a metal, and that he had it in his mind to make his gun on the Rodman-Whitworth-Uchatius process united, which is rather free-and-easy on his part, seeing that he will not allow Woolwich to indulge in the De Bange-Franco-Marine-Prusso-Elswick combination at all. What do we say? Why, he will not let them make a gun at all! We have not time to discuss the very amusing "lecture" of last week at the United Service Institution; but we hope to do so anon, and meantime let Colonel Hope go on with his gun. He cannot complain of War-Office obstruction this time. He has received a very liberal offer, and if he makes good one-fifth calibre of his words we shall work heart and soul for his installation at Woolwich as the sole gunmaker of her Majesty the Queen by sea and by land.

"LORD WOLSELEY," says Truth, "has got himself into trouble in America by writing a letter to an 'accomplished lady of Mobile,' in which he says:—

> 'I have only known two heroes in my life, and General R. E. Lee is one of them, so you can well understand how I value one of his letters. I believe that when time has calmed down the angry passions of the "North," General Lee will be accepted in the United States as the greatest General you ever had, and second as a patriot only to Washington himself. Stonewall Jackson I only knew slightly; his name will live for ever also in American history, when that of Mr. U. S. Grant has been long forgotten; such, at least, is my humble opinion of these men when viewed by an outside student of military history who has no local prejudice.'

The letter has been published in the 'Southern Historical Society Papers.'" Now, we cannot see how or why trouble should come to Lord Wolseley out of that expression of opinion, though if he wrote "Mr. U. S. Grant" instead of "General Grant" in a letter likely to be published to please an "accomplished lady," and propitiate Southern feeling, it was undoubtedly an error of judgment and of taste, especially unfortunate at a time when the ex-President and ex-Generalissimo of the Federal armies who beat Lee to his knees, and gave the Confederacy its death-blow, was "down on his luck," and was badly beaten by Fortune. Who was the other hero whom Lord Wolseley knew? Apparently it was not "Stonewall Jackson." But any way, Lord Wolseley had a right to his opinion. We cannot agree with Lord Wolseley in the faith that the "name" of Stonewall "will live for ever also in American history, when that of General Grant has been long forgotten," for Grant's name can never be forgotten in American history, were it only because he forced Lee to surrender, and (metaphorically) killed Stonewall himself. But Grant was, moreover, twice President of the United States, to which his sword restored Union. It is very probable Lord Wolseley wrote in a hurry what he intended for the eye of the lady only—la donna e Mobile—and that she printed it; and hence it will go down in Southern historical records that the English General, who is really a deep student of military history, and who is certainly an expert in war, thought Stonewall Jackson's name "will live for ever, when" that of Grant "has been long forgotten." Surely Lord Wolseley is justified in saying so, right or wrong; and no one can contradict him now.

KNOWING of what great importance to the Army a thorough investigation of the state of the Supply and Transport Services must be, we watched the inquiry of Dr. Cameron's Committee day by day. We heard evidence of the despatch of flour unfit for food; of hay bought at enormous prices, and yet found to be new, of water-meadow growth, badly saved, rejected for horses, and sent out to be used as bedding, and as such found to be rotten. We heard of supplies of mules which cost thousands of pounds landed too late, and in an unserviceable condition; of ships so packed that their cargoes could not be got at when wanted; of materials for wharves which arrived too late; of railway plant which could not be utilised for want of landing gear; of a railway corps, upon which the transport relied, sent out with only a few days' training. We heard evidence of want of labour, of want of drivers, of want of clothing, of the despatch of carts which the animals could not draw, of lamps which gave no light, of pack-saddles which could not be used. We had heard all these failures denied until the proofs became overwhelming; and then we watched with mingled sorrow and amusement the attempt to shift the responsibility from one to another, till the evidence for the defence had built up for Dr. Cameron a case against the departments which seemed unanswerable. But we were wrong, we have an answer. It is difficult to describe our sensations on reading the War Office communication to the Times of July 25,—The success of Lord Wolseley was brilliant, the military operation was successful; therefore, there was no failure of the War Office organisation. Dr. Cameron's charges fall to the ground! But will this satisfy the Committee? Will it satisfy the House of Commons and the public? We think with Dr. Cameron that it will not, and we hope that departments which could not only make such blunders, but which applaud themselves before the world, will not be any longer permitted to risk the destruction of an Army. After the optimist evidence of Sir John Adye (who, be it remembered, was giving his opinion upon the effects of his own acts as Surveyor-General), and the change of front attempted in the face of an enemy, if anything was wanting to prove the inability of the Surveyor-General's Department to understand what the country expects from it, the communication to the Times supplies it. The indifference, assumed though it may be, shows that the department does not accept the fact that the public will not allow money to be wasted and armies to be jeopardised by mismanagement whenever we engage in any serious and prolonged operation of war.

A COMMANDING officer recently made a request that extra duty pay might be granted to the officer acting during the absence on leave of the Paymaster of his battalion. This application was refused, as there were two other regiments with Paymasters quartered in the same barracks. Against this decision the commanding officer appealed, on the ground that all three Paymasters were absent together. In declining to entertain the appeal, the War Office authorities ruled that extra-duty pay will not be granted to officers acting for Paymasters merely because all the Paymasters at a station happen to be on leave at the same time, and added that such contingencies need but rarely arise if Paymasters stationed together arrange their leave in such a manner that one of them shall be available to superintend the work of those on leave. Now, the soundness of the principle on which this decision is based appears very doubtful; for, as a matter of fact, two of the three Paymasters in question were recalled from leave—owing in each instance to the Paymaster-Serjeant of the regiment having been transferred as a probationary Military Staff Clerk to another station—in order to take in hand the training of an Acting Paymaster-Serjeant having no previous knowledge of pay duties. And on rejoining, one of these officers discovered that a sum of money, which had been brought to the pay office during the absence of the Acting Paymaster, had been misappropriated by the Paymaster-Serjeant, a man whose previous character was such that he had been specially selected for a Military Staff Clerkship. The probationary Staff

Clerk was brought back in consequence, tried by court-martial, and convicted of embezzlement. If, then, the arrangement approved by the Pall Mall economist had been made here, one Paymaster would have been obliged to carry on the pay-office work of the three regiments, with the assistance of an experienced clerk in one only of the three offices. It is manifestly impossible for a Paymaster to be present in two or more pay offices at once; and arrangements made by the Pall Mall scribe, in absolute ignorance of the practical working of the regimental pay-office system, cannot but have results disastrous to the Paymasters, if not to the public also.

During the discussion on the Navy Estimates in the House of Commons on Monday night last, Mr. Healy's feelings were exercised with regard to the Royal Marines. He said that "a more ill-bred and ill-conditioned body of men than the Marines employed on special service in Dublin he had never seen." This language would be extremely hurtful to the sensibilities of the Marines, had they not previously received every approbation for the way in which they performed their very arduous duties while in Dublin. Mr. Puleston, too, in reply said that "the Marines had always received the greatest possible praise from all quarters for the manner in which they had performed their duties, and that even gentlemen sitting with the Member for Monaghan had volunteered to him more than once statements in the highest degree creditable to the Marines," to which Mr. Harrington assented. There is no doubt that the support given by the Marines to the detective force in Dublin materially tended to bring the then state of things to a conclusion, and possibly Mr. Healy chafes at the able manner in which they carried out their trust.

A Coastguardsman writes to ask "why the Coastguard are granted good conduct-medals," asserting it to be a pity that the Admiral-Superintendent of Reserves does not see his way clear to promote senior men holding good-conduct medals. Ninety per cent. of the men promoted, he says, since H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh gave up command, have been junior men. It may be, he thinks, that the Admiral promotes the men whose names are submitted to him without knowing whether they hold good-conduct medals or not. Or, he asks, can it be possible that the Royal Navy has come to such a pitch that no man but a favourite can get promoted? He further asserts that the men are prevented from representing their grievances to Admiral Hoskins, as any man speaking for his rights is a marked man. We make known this complaint of a most deserving body of men that it may be inquired into by the proper authorities.

The Lords of the Admiralty were present on Tuesday, July 15, when the Chilian cruiser Esmeralda went through her official trials outside the river Tyne, a large number of officials interested in fast cruisers being on board at the time. The results were most satisfactory. The contract speed was 17 knots. However, at the trial for speed, over an 11-knot course, her mean speed was 18·28 knots, everything working well and smoothly. Her armament was then tried, her two 10-in. 26-ton B.L. guns firing charges of 230 lb., and a 400-lb. projectile; the six 6 in. B.L. broadside guns, and a large number of machine and rapid-fire guns (6-pounders) were then fired, all with the most perfect success. The Esmeralda is now the fastest cruiser afloat, exceeding the speed of H.M.S. Iris by a little over a quarter of a knot. The displacement of the Esmeralda is about 2,900 tons. Twin screws, driven by independent engines, propel the vessel. Forced draught is used in chasing, &c. She was designed and built by Sir W. G. Armstrong, Mitchell, and Co., at their Low Walker shipyard. The engines are by Hawthorn and Co., and the guns and Vavasour carriages are of the latest type produced at these Elswick Works. There are several vessels of this type in course of construction at Elswick for foreign Governments; but none, we believe, for the English Admiralty. They take eighteen months to build and equip ready for sea.

During the last quarter, five officers and fifty-three seamen were tried by court-martial. In numerous cases heavy sentences of imprisonment have been awarded for insubordination, an offence which a few years ago the swift and effective punishment of flogging would have atoned for to the benefit of both the man, the service, and the country, as the latter would not have been burdened with his support for some years, and the man would not have been compelled to herd with felons, to the contamination of his moral character.

The appointments of Judge-Advocates to Naval courts-martial is one that we should have thought would have long ago engaged the attention of the Admiralty. The duties of the Judge-Advocate are, whether invited to or not, to advise the Court on all legal matters, as well as the procedure of the trial generally. This appointment is always conferred on an officer of the Accountant branch of the Navy, whose qualifications for the office are his having been examined, when passing for Assistant-Paymaster, in Naval law by three Paymasters [who were, probably, more ignorant of the matter than the candidate they were detailed to examine in it. The result is that we have the anomaly presented of an officer sitting on a court-martial to advise the Court in law who is probably profoundly ignorant of the subject. Considering the very high fees paid to Deputy-Judge-Advocates, there ought to be no difficulty in procuring properly qualified persons to take the appointment.

This Empire depends for its existence on the Navy. It is on "the Fleet" that Great Britain must always rely for the safety of these islands and for the protection of the Queen's dominions all over the world. It may be said that the great dependency, from the domination of which the new-fangled title of "Empress" has been derived as a pendant to the ancient Royal style of the Monarch, is held in subjection by the Army, and that our garrisons abroad are furnished by the land forces of the Crown; but it is equally true that it is on the ability of the Navy to escort our troops, and to keep open their communications, that the maintenance of these possessions rests. The Navy is admitted to be the senior service of England. The most enthusiastic soldier feels that England is not a military nation in the sense in which Germany, Russia, Austria, and France are counted to be so. In point of fact, there has never been, for the centuries which have elapsed since Kings and Generals led our victorious troops in famous Continental campaigns, any war in which English troops were without allies, and to-day less than ever could we hold our own single-handed abroad; whereas, our fleets have generally been left to do their work without help, as our allies on land could render us no assistance at sea. These considerations point, we think, to the necessity and propriety of national recognition in all cases where the two services are represented. Though the fashion of the toast of "the Army and Navy" has now the vogue, there is no doubt that the order should be inverted. It is a small matter, and may be allowed to slide. In reference to the designs for the new public offices at Whitehall and Charing Cross, however, there is likely to be some feeling on the part of the Navy, which, "sentimental" as it may be, is worth while attending to. The proposed War Office, we see, occupies a commanding site and a preponderating share of the allotted space to the buildings wherein the administration of the services is to be conducted. There is a grand frontage in Whitehall, and a fine line of building for the War Office on the side of the Park, whereas the Admiralty has but a narrow and insignificant front on the Whitehall side, and the front facing towards Drummond's Bank is not displayed on the side of the thoroughfare. A stranger, in fact, will see a grand War Office, and will be obliged to turn out of the main road to get at the Admiralty.

Sub-Lieutenants Walter Carey and Charles Edward Madden have been promoted to the rank of Lieutenants in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of July 27, 1884. These officers are promoted over the heads of 54 of their seniors, for having taken their first-class certificates, and a second-class in seamanship, we presume; but if so, why are not Mr. Napier, nine above them, and Mr. McCrea, with three first-class certificate, and 53 above them on the List, also promoted. We fear theoretic education is being thought far too highly of in the Navy, to the great disadvantage of good practical officers.

The Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the method of constructing ships of war, &c., have made their report. It is understood that whilst recommending the retention of the Government Dockyards for the repair of vessels out of commission they strongly advise, on grounds of public policy, that in future the original construction and armouring of the vessels should be for the most part entrusted to private firms by open competition.

We understand a descriptive pamphlet will shortly be published by the Admiralty on the Royal Marine Forces, which will be circulated through all post-offices in England. As considerable ignorance of the conditions of service and the advantages of the corps exists in the country, especially in inland districts, we feel sure that this is a wise step to take. The pamphlet is written from the point of view of a man serving in the ranks, and will contain every information about the service a candidate may wish to have before making up his mind to join.

About 400 of the new steel guns have been completed at the Royal Gun Factories, and these are nearly sufficient for the rearmament of the smaller ships of the Royal Navy. More than 150 of the new guns are of the 6-in. class of breech-loaders, and seven-eighths of the whole are specially adapted for sea service. Larger guns for the heavier ironclads are now in course of construction, and all the guns now made being of the type described by Colonel Maitland in his recent lecture as the latest combination of all that is best in all the best systems,—that is to say, Woolwich has pirated the ideas of others to form a combination gun in which the Government shall not have to pay any royalties.

In the Black Sea rapid progress is being made with the three new ironclads for the Russian Fleet. The Russian Admiralty has formed a torpedo squadron in the Black Sea, composed of the sea-going torpedo steamers Batoum, Soukhum, and Poti, and 12 smaller torpedo cutters, with the cruiser Pamiat Merkurie attached as flagship. The Popoffka Novgorod, which has been laid up for two years, is having fresh boilers placed on board, for Sebastopol.

With regard to the paragraph which appeared last week in the United Service Gazette relative to a paper on "Recruiting," which was to have been read by Lieutenant-Colonel Moody, R.M.L.I., on the 27th ult., at the Royal United Service Institution, we regret to find our contemporary has been misinformed, as we are in a position to state that the paper is only postponed, and that solely on account of the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Moody on sick-leave on the date fixed for the lecture. We are also in a position to state that the Admiralty offered no opposition; on the contrary, assisting in every way in their power in the compilation of the paper, as their Lordships have nothing to pay but much to gain by the publication of any statistics on Naval recruiting.

The official list of the French Navy shows that of French war ships there are in all 274, exclusive of sailing ships and torpedo-boats, while a return just presented to Parliament places our own Naval strength at 283 ships and vessels, exclusive of torpedo-boats. The French have 58 armoured ships, exclusive of their new class of armoured gunboats building, and not reckoned, while England has 62 armour-clads. The French have 11 swift cruisers of the frigate type, with guns between decks, 19 cruisers carrying their guns on deck, 20 corvettes of the "Eclaireur" type, 14 station avisos, 40 squadron avisos, 14 sloops, 22 foreign-service gunboats, 12 transport avisos, and 32 steam transports. These are manned by 47,600 men, and carry 1,500 guns. The British Navy is manned by 53,000 officers, seamen, marines, boys, and idlers, the latter in some ships averaging 35 per cent. of the crew, and carries some 1,942 guns of all sizes, most of which are obsolete. From the foregoing it is evident that the French Navy is, in comparison to the interests it has to defend, far stronger than that of England.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Colonel P. Hill as Commanding Royal Artillery Officer in the Dominion of Canada, vice Colonel Le Cocq, who takes over the Artillery command at Dublin.

Lord Wolseley has recently received an interesting memento of his visit to the Canadian North-West some fifteen years ago. In 1870, at the head of an expedition, he, under the title of Lieut.-Col. Wolseley, put down the Red River rebellion, in which the old Fort Garry of the Hudson Bay Company played so prominent a part. In acknowledging the receipt of a lithograph of the interior of the fort, Lord Wolseley says:—"It will always serve to remind me of a country that I am attached to by many ties, and in whose prosperity I shall always take the deepest interest."

Lord Stradbroke dined with the officers of the 2nd Battalion, Coldstream Guards, at Windsor, on the 22nd ult., he having, on that day seventy-two years before, taken part in the battle of Salamanca as an Ensign in the regiment.

It is not pleasant to read of "outrages on the British flag," and the two which were reported last week, together with the disturbing incidents outside the lines at Gibraltar recently, deserve attention, and demand action, and require a redress which no doubt the Foreign Office will, after the usual delays, obtain, in the case of the Gotfried, from the Spanish Government. The hauling-down of the British flag at Vrijburg, in Stellaland, by the people seems to have been a Dutch outbreak, for which it would not be possible to make the Boer Government responsible; but it is a matter which cannot be allowed to drop. Mr. Mackenzie should receive full support in his measures for the arrest of the ring-leaders of the mob, and there should be no delay in their trial and punishment if found guilty. As to the Gotfried, there is a clear duty incumbent on the Government if the vessel was engaged in an innocent voyage, but we know, as yet, too little of the circumstances to pronounce an opinion respecting the conduct of the Spanish gunboat which chased and fired on the Gotfried ere their boat boarded her and pulled down the British flag. For the latter act, there seems to be no possible justification. We do not understand that all the coast of Cuba is blockaded, or that the Gotfried was trying to run the blockade. If she were taken as a prize within the limits of the Spanish authority, there might be grounds for sending her to a prize-court, but there could be none for hauling-down her flag, and then, when it was found she was not running contraband of war, coolly letting her go without apology or reparation.

It is understood in Canada that the Hon. Andrew A. Macdonald is to be the new Governor of Prince Edward Island. This gentleman's grandfather was one of the earliest settlers on the island, and the appointment is looked upon as a fitting tribute to the loyalty of the Scotch Highlanders.

The sixth annual Army Rifle Meeting will take place at the Cæsar's Camp Ranges, Aldershot, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday next, when prizes to the value of £500 will be shot for. The entries this year are more numerous than on any former occasion.

The whole of the arrangements for the meeting are being carried out under the immediate orders and superintendence of Major Burton, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, who is hon. secretary and treasurer. Musketry and military training will be suspended during the three days.

It may not be generally known, and was probably never considered by the public, that the two officers who appeared before Lord Morley's Committee as "Mr." Saunders and "Mr." Reeves were officers who rank respectively as colonel and lieutenant-colonel. Their evidence should therefore, from their long experience, have been of considerable value. The ignoring of rank amongst the senior officers of the Commissariat and Transport Staff is one of the grievances to which they are subjected, and is an anomaly which cannot too soon be removed. It was considered necessary in 1880 to transplant the Department, as it were, by transferring it from the War Office to the Horse Guards, and the fiat went forth that all officers who were not selected should be retired, and the new Staff, with its specially selected officers was henceforth, as vacancies occurred, to be recruited from regimental officers. As it was admitted when the new Department was formed, that titular rank, whether substantive or honorary, was a necessity, it is difficult to understand why the anomaly is allowed to exist whereby one-half of the Staff are not allowed titular rank, while the other half, and that the lower, are. It is not creditable to our Army that such a state of things should exist, since it subjects good and deserving officers to inconveniencies and slights which can scarcely be for the advantage of the public service. Independent of the disagreeables in the service itself, which will arise consequent on titular rank being withheld, the outside public fail to understand why Assistant-Commissary-General Brown, who has the rank of Major, and commands two or three companies of the Commissariat and Transport Corps, should not be addressed by a rank known to all, nor is it pleasant for the officer to be eclipsed by a newly-appointed probationer under his orders, who comes into the Department as a Captain, and who, on account of his rank, socially supersedes his superior, who is only known by the prefix of "Mr." The public generally do not understand these nice distinctions, but are entirely guided by the titular rank, and it is not in the interests of discipline that any body of officers should be subjected to the sneers of their juniors. Such an anomaly could not exist in any army but our own. In the field there is necessarily much friction, owing to rank being ignored, and it is not by any means easy to explain to the satisfaction of Tommy Atkins, or even to his commanding officer, why an individual in uniform, with a crown on his shoulder-strap, should not be called by the rank which the badge represents. One result of Dr. Cameron's Committee will, no doubt, be to put a stop to the present most unsatisfactory state of affairs, which certainly is not calculated to promote the smooth working of the Commissariat and Transport arrangements of an army in the field.

Much satisfaction has been caused in the Dominion of Canada by the receipt of a cablegram from the National Artillery Association of England stating that arrangements have been made for sending a team of three officers and twenty-two men to take part in the Dominion Artillery Competition next September. The Canadian Artillery are already engaged in active practice. The Dominion Artillery Association has done all in its power in the offering of a number of prizes for the meeting, when that presented by his Excellency the Governor-General will also be competed for.

Lieutenant-Colonel Pollard, from the Staff at Headquarters, succeeds Colonel Caine as Assistant-Adjutant-General of Artillery in Madras, and will leave England about the end of September to take up his duties.

Although it is just ninety years ago since the French first established a Military Balloon Corps, our first serious step in this direction was only taken the other day by the formation of a School of Military Ballooning at Chatham. As a rule, we are rather late in adopting what a prejudiced mind considers as an innovation; but in this case let us hope that our own experiences and those of observations for the past century will go far to make this School the foundation of what with us ought to become a permanent military institution. In 1794 a military aeronautic school was founded at Meudon, under the superintendence of Colonel Coutelle and a chemist, named Guyton de Morveau. Four balloons were speedily manufactured for the use of the armies operating in the North, on the Sambre, on the Meuse, and in Egypt. In June the same year Colonel Coutelle, accompanied by his adjutant and the General, made an ascent in a captive balloon of four hours' duration, for the purposes of observation before the battle of Fleurus, and it is reported that to this was mainly due the victory, owing to the moral effect on the enemy, who were greatly disconcerted at their positions and movements being discovered, thus preventing the possibility of a surprise from their side. This balloon was inflated with hydrogen gas. In 1830, during the African campaign, military ballooning was attempted on a small scale, but with no valuable or even practical result. Again, in 1840, a reconnaissance was made in a balloon sent up from before Venice. We find again that, in the Italian war of 1859, although there was no military balloon corps ready at the time, the French made use of balloons managed by professionals, and that an important reconnaissance was made in a fire balloon before the battle of Solferino. During the late American War balloons were much used by the Federals. General M'Clellan had a regular balloon corps attached to the Staff of his Army. This corps consisted of a captain, an assistant-captain, and about 50 non-commissioned officers and men. The appareil was carried in two four-horse waggons; these waggons also carried the generators. There were acid carts besides, and hydrogen gas was used. There were two balloons in use, one of a capacity of 13,000 cubic feet, the other of 26,000 cubic feet. Their inflation usually occupied from three to four hours; and it is only fair to presume that, as these balloons were in constant use till the close of the war, some material value must have been drawn from them. During the siege of Paris, the only means of communication that the beleaguered garrison had with the outer world was through balloons. Two immense Government manufactories were started at two of the principal railway-stations, and many hundred men and women were employed, the women in cutting and sewing, the men, chiefly sailors, in knotting and splicing. In all, 64 balloons were sent up; several were captured by the Prussians; many were fired at. One descended at Christiania, after a journey of 15 hours' duration. The average capacity of these balloons were from 70,000 to 72,000 cubic feet. Experiments were tried at Aldershot in 1862-63, and again in 1880, with the ill-fated "Saladin," in which, later on, poor Mr. Powell lost his life; but these experiments were on no very large scale. Captive balloons are always more dangerous than free, and can only be managed with any safety in calm or moderate weather. Each balloon should be supplied with a parachute. On September 21, 1802, Garnerin left his balloon at a height of three-quarters of a mile from the earth. At first he descended with great velocity; but his descent became more gradual, and in four minutes from the time he quitted his balloon he landed gently and safely on terra firma. Small parachutes would also be found useful for lowering sketches, reports, messages, &c.

When there was a probability of Europe being divided into two hostile camps, with Germany, Austria, and Italy on one side, and Russia and France on the other, whilst England as well as the smaller Powers were ready to join either one side or the other, the combatants were not numbered by thousands or hundreds of thousands, but by millions. Germany disposes of a mobilised field army, including Landwehr, of 1,265,746 men, with 2,496 field and 1,352 siege guns, besides a Landsturm numbering 290,125 men, with 132 field-guns. The Russian is, in round numbers, 875,000 men, with 2,214 guns; that of the Reserve Army, 400,000 men, with 768 guns; total, 1,275,000 men, with 2,982 guns. The second Reserve of Russia is divided into two classes, the first class supplying nearly 2,000,000 men, whilst no estimate can, as yet, be formed of the second class. A want of human fighting material would consequently never hamper Russian operations. If we include the mobilised territorial troops which would reinforce the French field army, France would dispose of 1,038,000 combatants, with 3,738 guns. Austria has a field army of 800,000 men, reinforced by the Landwehr of Cisleithania (about 138,000), and of Hungary (about 205,000 men), a total strength of 1,143,000 men, with 1,623 guns. The Tyrol would, besides, supply a force of sharpshooters of about 20,000 men. The Landsturm is organised only for the Tyrol, Vorarlberg, and Hungary, and in 1873 numbered 125,000 men. The Italian field army numbers 440,000 men, with 984 guns, reinforced by 200,000 Militia with 324 field-guns, bringing up the total strength of the Italian field army to 640,000, with 1,308 guns. No account is taken in this calculation of about 50,000 Alpine troops, with 60 mountain-guns, in which, however, are included 72 Alpine companies of the Territorial Militia. The strength of the Territorial Militia is about 1,000,000; but of these, only 300,000 men are organised into regiments. Leaving the field armies out of consideration, a short summary gives the following quantitative result:—

(a.) Landwehr (Reserve Cadres, Territorial Army, Mobile Militia).

France	582,523 men	864 guns.
Austria	343,000 ,,	(exclusive of Tyrolean sharpshooters).
Italy	200,000 ,,	324 guns.

(b.) Landsturm (Opoltchenie, Reserve of the Territorial Army, Territorial Militia).

Russia	2,000,000 men (1st class)
Italy	300,000 ,,

The German Landwehr consists exclusively of men who have served in the active Army.

The Standard correspondent at Cairo learns that "Gens. Stephenson, Dormer, and Wood have as yet received no answer from home to their suggestion that they should all go up the country to inspect the fortifications, and it is considered improbable that any one except Gen. Wood will be sent."

HOTCHKISS AND NORDENFELT GUNS. — A CORRECTION.

We insert the following letter with the simple observation that we have no interest beyond that which we share with all the nation in the adoption of any system of guns that we always desire to correct "errors," and are thankful to those who give us the means of doing so:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—If you desire to correct an error in your paper of Saturday, the 26th inst., I have much pleasure in giving you an opportunity of doing so. You say with reference to the 6-pounder quick-firing guns that the Admiralty have divided the order for this year's supply between Messrs. Nordenfelt and Hotchkiss, with the proviso that the Hotchkiss 6-pounder shall be adapted to the Nordenfelt ammunition and mounting. It is exactly the reverse. The fact being that, at the request of the Admiralty, Messrs. Hotchkiss had to furnish Messrs. Nordenfelt with drawings of their ammunition, showing the dimensions of the chamber, the rifling length of barrel, size of pivot, and exact calibre of bore, and so far as the mounting is concerned, Messrs. Nordenfelt's guns are to be mounted on Hotchkiss's pivot, the Hotchkiss 6-pounder gun having been recommended by the Ordnance Committee.—I am, &c.,

R. MACNEILL.

Hotchkiss and Co., London, July 28.

[The misinformation thus corrected was furnished to one of our staff who had no means of knowing the facts, we presume, and who could have had no motive in making use of it except that of giving service news.—ED. A. & N. G.]

THE NEW ADMIRALTY AND WAR OFFICES.

The judges appointed to consider the designs in the competition for the new offices for the Admiralty and War Departments, on the site adjoining the north side of the Horse Guards, have agreed to the following report:—1. The competition consisted of two parts; the first, an open one of sketch designs, subject to the conditions laid down in the instructions issued in Sept., 1883, by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings. The judges were directed to select ten designs from those sent in to this first competition, or such less number as they might think fit, the authors of which were to be invited to compete in the second or final competition, for which matured drawings were to be submitted. 2. One hundred and twenty-eight designs were sent in by March 1 of this year for the first competition, the names of their authors being contained in sealed envelopes, which which were not opened until after the selection. The judges, after full consideration, selected nine designs, the authors of which were invited to enter into the second competition, for which further instructions and suggestions were issued. The authors of the selected designs are as follows:—Messrs. Glover and Salter, Poultry, London; H. Hall and W. H. Powell, Doughty Street, London; Leeming and Leeming, Halifax; Maxwell and Tuke, Manchester; Mr. Thomas Porter, Norwood; Messrs. Spalding and Auld, Queen Victoria Street, London; Stark and Lindsay, Glasgow; Verity and Hunt, Regent Street, London; A. Webb and E. I. Bell, Queen Anne's Gate, London. 3. The matured drawings of the second competition were sent in by June 21 last. 4. The judges, after a careful examination of these designs, selected three as possessing especial merit—viz., those of Messrs. Leeming and Leeming, Halifax; Messrs. Verity and Hunt, Regent Street, London; Messrs. A. Webb and E. I. Bell, Queen Anne's Gate, London. 5. After further consideration of the relative merits of these three designs, the judges are unanimously of opinion that, taking the plans and elevation together, and having regard to the conditions of the competition, Messrs. Leeming and Leeming have produced the best design, and they accordingly recommend to her Majesty's Government that, subject to the approval of Parliament, Messrs. Leeming and Leeming be employed as architects of the new building for the Admiralty and War Office.

"Lieutenant-Colonel" writes:—"I was much surprised, not to say grieved, at seeing a fine young cavalry soldier of the 10th Royal Hussars being escorted through the streets of Folkestone with handcuffs on his wrists. The man was perfectly sober and quiet. No doubt he had been out on a night's spree. The remarks of many respectable tradespeople were certainly not complimentary to the authorities for allowing such a system to prevail in the Army, as marching temporary prisoners through the streets in irons. It is bad policy, too, especially if it is true the Army is short by 9,000 men. A cab would have taken the prisoner, escort and all, to camp for 2s. 6d., and the Queen's uniform would have been spared disgrace."

Lieut.-Gen. Higginson will be accompanied during the manœuvres of the Russian army by Col. R. C. Low, Bengal Cavalry, and Capt. W. L. Davidson, R.H.A.

The Morning Post points out that by an extraordinary exercise of physical endurance, the Committee of Supply was enabled on Tuesday morning to complete the whole of the remaining Army and Navy Estimates, amounting in the aggregate to £5,864,797, of which £3,389,300 was for the Army and £2,475,407 for the Navy. Only one division was taken, by which the vote was affirmed by 58 to 21. In the majority were 23 official members.

The Egyptian Gazette states that "Major C. M. Grenfell, of the Cavalry Brigade of the Egyptian Army, who has been absent from Egypt on leave of absence, will, on his return, assume duty early next month on the Staff of Brigdr.-Gen. F. Grenfell, commanding the First Brigade of that force."

The Times correspondent telegraphs from Egypt that "Gen. Earle will go to Suakim, and Gen. Fremantle will succeed him in the command at Alexandria."

Foreign Military Literature.

Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, No. 55.—"Angra Pequena" is the title of a short paper dealing with the efforts made by Germany in recent years to establish colonies, especially after the failure in the Samoa affair. The Bay of Angra Pequena supplies good anchorage, and is the best harbour on the southern portion of the West African coast, the Bay of Saldanha, perhaps, excepted. The climate is good, and the change of temperature only trifling. There is no water, which has to be brought from Cape Town at a cost of 33s. per ton. A belt of loose sand, about twenty miles broad, and which makes intercourse with the interior very difficult, surrounds the harbour at a distance from the coast, varying between four and ten miles. The mineral wealth of the country is said to be great, and to include silver and gold, besides copper and metallic iron. Angra Pequena is, as a matter of fact, the first colony of the new empire; but it is doubtful whether its possession will fulfil the hopes built upon it. Whilst the negotiations were pending between England and Germany, a portion of the German Press went so far as to talk about the formation of German colonial troops and the establishment of over-sea fortresses and garrisons. This was rather precipitate, and there is no need for either as yet. Germany has in her marine battalion the basis of future colonial troops, that is to say, when they are really wanted. The real, if indirect, protection for German colonies will always be a powerful army at home. The neighbours of Germany will take good care not to injure either a German colony or the prestige of Germany and her children abroad. If Germany is not, for the present, able to cope with France at sea, the latter will never forget that Metz, the gate of France, is in German hands. The remarks of the author with regard to England show such sober common-sense that they deserve to be quoted. He says:—"Although a portion of the English Press points to the increasing power of Germany as a cause of disquietude, England, who has always been friendly to us—her friendliness almost amounting to a tradition—will not expect a conflict with us; Germany certainly will never be the cause of a quarrel. Whoever thought otherwise will have found a sufficient refutation in the Angra Pequena negotiations. The interests of Germany and England in countries beyond the sea have been the same for years, and it is to be hoped that they will remain so. England is by no means blind. She knows very well that the Germans are good colonists; she has had in her colonies, especially those of South Africa and South Australia, many Germans, who have worked in common with the English in the cultivation of those countries and the civilisation of their inhabitants. Germans have earned their bread under English protection; Englishmen have found Germans industrious elements of colonisation. A hostile policy on the part of England towards Germany need, therefore, not be expected, because it would react unfavourably upon the population of her colonies. England must always take note of this fact, for, next to the English, the Germans supply the largest contingent to the English colonies."

The Journal Officiel Militaire publishes a decree on the subject of the direction general of railways, routes, &c., for the Army. The director is to be a General under the orders of the chief of the Staff, and all the services of the rear will be concentrated in his hands. These services embrace all that is necessary for keeping up relations between the army and the national territory. This implies an invasion. The objects of the direction are thus set forth:—(1.) To convey to the army all the stores it may require. (2.) To take to the rear all sick men, prisoners, and useless material. (3.) To regulate and assure the working of all the national and foreign lines under the authority of the Commander-in-Chief, at the same time to keep the various means of communication in good repair, and to protect them. (4.) To provide quarters, rations, &c., for all men and horses in the rear of the theatre of operations. (5.) To store and keep in good preservation all the provisions drawn from the national territory, or procured by means of requisitions. (6.) To look after the distribution and employment of the troops engaged on route duty, and the police in the rear of the army. (7.) To organise and administer the enemy's territory, when occupied, until the installation of territorial commanders. It will be seen that the "direction" will have plenty to do in time of war.

La Stratégie Appliquée. The guarantees given by the great European Powers to the neutrality of Belgium have not inspired with a sense of perfect security the warlike and laborious descendants of the races which for hundreds of years have been exposed to the shock of battle, and whose lands have been trodden by the feet of myriads of combatants—"the cockpit of Europe." In no country, perhaps, has the art of war been more intently studied than in the happy region which is defended by the jealousies and obligations of the nations which made erewhile the Low Countries their schauplatz for hostile armies, and the number and excellence of the works which have been published in Belgium on the theory and practice of war attest the interest which is felt by the army of the neutral and protected State in the abstract application of the lessons which Europe has been so good as to afford them in re militari. Of these recent publications the series of treatises which the "Librairie Européenne" (C. Muquardt, of Brussels), (Merzbach and Falk, éditeurs), from the pen of Colonel Fix, of the 6th Regiment of Infantry, deserves special mention, and we can recommend with confidence to our officers the volumes on "applied strategy," of which the title is given at the head of this brief notice, as it promises to be a complete and exhaustive treatise on the subject. We shall give a detailed review of the work when it is finished.

The Battle-Fields of Germany. By Colonel C. B. Malleson, C.S.I. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

The "Thirty Years' War" naturally divides itself into three great series or epochs. The first, which is treated of in this volume, deals with the battle which was the turning-point in the history of the House of Hohenzollern, with the decisive overthrow of the Turks before Vienna, and with the famous field where the first check was given to the ambitious designs of Louis XIV. on Germany. From that moment the Porte and France ceased to be mortally dangerous to the Empire, and the North and South, the former represented by Frederick II. of Prussia, the latter by the House of Hapsburg, began their long struggle for predominance, which was undecided when the old order of things in Europe was swept away by the wave of the French Revolution. The volume now published contains an eloquent description of ten of the most brilliant battles of that stormy period, commencing with Leipzig (Breitenfeld) and closing with that of Blenheim. With the exception of Fehrbellin, the author has visited all the battle-fields that he describes. Among many striking episodes, none can approach the fall of "Magdeburg," which was stormed by the troops of Pappenheim and Tilly. "It was the most barbarous act of, in a military sense, a barbaric age. It is computed that 30,000 persons were ruthlessly massacred. It was not till several days after the storm that Tilly himself ventured into the city. The evil had then been consummated,—a deed had been done which rendered conciliation impossible, and which marked in broad and bloody lines the demarcation between Catholic and Reformed." This battle, according to Colonel Malleson, may be regarded as the first of a series which brought about the ensuring to every man freedom of conscience, rooting out and destroying the principle that because one man believed certain dogmas, therefore all the German people should be compelled to believe them. "This was the principle which Ferdinand II. had introduced into Germany. This was the principle which Gustavus Adolphus invaded Germany to destroy." "Never in the history of the world," continues the author, "has the influence of one man been greater upon a people than was the influence of Ferdinand II. on the hereditary states and kingdoms of the House of Hapsburg. At the time of the death of his predecessor, the Emperor Mathias, the reformed religion preponderated, not only in by far the greater part of Bohemia, but in the two Austrias and in Moravia. This man, however, by persecution almost completely expelled the new faith all over Germany. The turning of the page will show to the reader the embodiment of the other principle, the principle of toleration which was cultivated throughout the entire possessions of Gustavus Adolphus. He declared in favour of toleration, and from that declaration he never swerved. One proud recollection must ever remain connected with the great battle described by Colonel Malleson. It was the first effective blow struck in the Germany of the seventeenth century for freedom of conscience." As such, it deserves a permanent resting-place in the thoughts and memories of the descendants of those who so nobly fought to free themselves and their children from a yoke which they had found intolerable. The eighth chapter, under the heading of "Fehrbellin," gives a complete sketch of the history of the House which now occupies the most prominent position in Germany, and will enable the reader to note how the qualities which are conspicuous in the ruling Emperor of Germany characterised the most able of his many eminent ancestors. The ninth chapter sketches the history of Hungary under the Hapsburgs, and the several invasions of the Turks, until their last attempt in 1683 was shattered before the walls of Vienna. The concluding chapter in the volume presents a sketch of the political occurrences which from the time of the accession of Louis XIV. preceded and led up to Blenheim. In his concluding observations on this, the battle-field which closes the series, the author sums up the enormous effect of the victory throughout all Europe. It dashed to the ground the ambitious plans of Louis XIV. and of Max Emanuel. It saved the House of Hapsburg, whose hereditary dominions, had the result been different, would have fallen a prey to the Elector. It dealt a very hard blow to the insurgents in Hungary, who had counted on the help of France; and what was of scarcely less importance, it showed the world of Europe that it was possible to defeat even the armies of Louis XIV. Blenheim was to that monarch what Moscow was a little more than a century later to Napoleon. Although this may not be the place to discuss the merits of the two allied commanders, the author observes that if Marlborough struck the decisive blow, he was facing Tallard with an army greater than that of the French General, whereas the harder task had been assigned to Eugène of confronting Machin and the Elector, with a force inferior to them by more than one-third, and yet it was the timely aid rendered by Eugène which enabled Marlborough to deliver the attack which decided the battle.

The Army and Navy Magazine, for August, does not rise beyond an average dull respectability—always excepting Mrs. Phillips's novel. Col. Malleson's first paper, on "Ambushes and Surprises," dealing with Hannibal's victory at "Lake Trasimenus," despite the industry and good writing of the author, goes a little too far back. But why "Lake Trasimenus?" Surely the name should be given in English as "Thrasymene," if "Lake" be put before it, or it should be "Lacus Trasimenus" or "Trasimeni." "Our Army," by a "Field Officer," does not put any new complexion on our military condition; but as to the proposal of the author to apply the ballot to the Militia, and raising a permanent force of that branch of the service of 100,000 men, at a cost of £4,000,000 per annum, we only say, "We wish we may get it." It is wonderful that people are found to waste time on laborious calculations—more wonderful that other people are found to print them. Well may the author say,—"It is perhaps a Utopian scheme." The editor must have been "hard up," indeed, for matter when he put such a "novelty" as "A Visit to Cairo," by "H. N. S.," into type. The "Example to the British Admiralty," which Mr. Mark Fytton would set, is apparently to be found in the policy of the Brazilian Government, which, not being able to build war-ships of its own, buys them of private firms in England.

Sporting Firearms for Bush and Jungle. By Captain F. Burgess, Bengal Staff Corps. (W. H. Allen and Co.)—This is a really useful book, intended for youngsters who are about to embark on a career in India or the Colonies where firearms form a necessary part of a man's outfit. The author has entered on his work with an evident relish, and manages to convey a great deal of valuable information to his readers. At the commencement he offers several observations regarding guns, pointing out the great importance of obtaining them from good makers. Then he applies himself to the care and preservation of firearms, a very important subject, followed up with "The Loads for Shot Guns," notes on Schultz powder, Kynoch's perfect cases, and sizes of shot for various game. Then comes some useful remarks on light-weight small-bore guns and large-bore wild-fowl guns. As to pistols, there is plenty to be said, and the author says it in giving some valuable hints as to revolvers, "their pull-off," their accuracy, &c., and, in fact, the author may feel himself perfectly justified in asserting that a perusal of its pages must prove profitable to those for whom it was intended.

Holiday Handbooks.—These are very remarkable little books. In addition to their intrinsic merits, they afford striking evidence of continued appreciation on the part of the public of "light literature." Messrs. Cassell and Co., Limited, led the way several years ago, and Mr. Percy Lindley now follows the example through the medium of holiday handbooks. The latest of these are The Moselle, which will be duly appreciated by Continental travellers, as well as its companion, a Tourist's Travel Talk. The former is a pleasantly written description of Treves, nicely illustrated; the latter, a phrase-book of the English, French, and German, which may be carried comfortably in the waistcoat or reticule. Perhaps the most important feature in holiday handbooks is that clever illustrations, clear type, good paper, "and all," costs but one penny.

THE VOLUNTEER FORCE.

"Bonti," who is determined on meeting an invasion from some enemy or other in a very resolute manner, writes to make the suggestion that, as the greatest want of our Volunteer Force is Cavalry, each hunt should be formed into a corps of guides, to be attached to head-quarters as orderlies to the cavalry and to advanced brigades, &c., so as to pilot staff officers as scouts, to carry letters, obtain information, in fact, to aid the eyes and ears of the Army. These corps would need but little or no training beyond the sword exercise, and a few simple formations. Neither would a change of dress be required,—the usual red-coat, breeches, and top-boots, with a hunting-cap, and the addition of a pouch, sword, and revolver, would furnish a useful workmanlike dress of the national colour, all that is needed being to establish this organisation in time of peace, and occasionally during manœuvres, if we are ever to have any, to give the members—who might, if need be, rank as officers,—an opportunity of learning their work. Hunts exist in all parts of the kingdom, so, be the theatre of operation where it may, a corps of most invaluable horsemen would exist on the spot, its place being taken up by the next hunt as soon as the Army moved from the radius of one hunt to that of another. This, with the adoption of Carted Infantry, in opposition to Mounted Infantry, as suggested by me in your columns last year, would do much to increase the efficiency of our Volunteers, and make up for the numerical inferiority of its mounted branches. Well! All we can say is that we do not at all envy the rôle of the huntsmen if it comes to such close and serious work as "Bonti" contemplates.

Capt. Boardman having arrived at Assouan for special service on the Nile, Capt. Bedford will shortly resume the command of the Monarch at Alexandria. Com. Hammill has already resumed duty.

The Russian naval manœuvres this year will be on a large scale. Four fleets will participate in the operations, including the squadron of the Naval School under the command of Vice-Admiral Nozimow, and the grand squadron of torpedo-vessels, directed by Vice-Admiral Pilkine. At the head of the entire operations will be Vice-Admiral Tchikhatchew, Chief of the Staff, Major-General of the Navy. A disembarkation of troops near Vyborg, which will be defended by infantry of the line and cavalry, forms part of the scheme. The mixed ironclad frigate Vladimir Monomaque will take part in the manœuvres.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Cairo, July 18, 1884.

The "very latest" from Dongola is of a startling character. The Mudir begins to find the excitement in his victories and defeats grow less. He has, perhaps, heard that Nubar no longer sheds tears at every fresh demand for succour, nor grasps with enthusiasm the hand of every visitor at the news of each victory. The game was beginning to be played out, even apart from the fact that, according to even the more exaggerated views of the population of the Soudan, there could be no more enemies left to kill. There was nothing for it but to play trumps, so he has again excited interest by professing to have intelligence of Gordon. The "heroic Mudir" would appear to have a vein of humour in his composition, and cracks jokes with the Khedive by telegraph. "I have good news for you," he wires one day to the Palace, and thus rouses Tewfik from a pleasant dream of Clifford Lloyd, Benson Maxwell, and Bishara Takla reforming Egypt in the columns of the Times. Tewfik appears to have ruminated over this joke for some time, and at last gave it up, and telegraphed, "What is it? Another victory or slaughter?" The wily Mudir keeps him a little longer in suspense, and then telegraphs, "Got a letter from Gordon!" This certainly fetches not only the Palace, but all who previously took only a languid interest in the matter. Telegrams fly fast and furious, and spasmodically the Mudir lets out his tit-bit little by little,—"Got his own seal upon it!" "Khartoum and Sennaar all safe!" "Wants to know when those reinforcements are coming!" But at this last instalment the sceptical Egyptian public looks grave. Clearly, it is not an improbable question for Gordon to ask, but equally clearly it is a matter about which the "heroic Mudir" is probably very nearly as anxious as Gordon; and, moreover, it is a subject upon which the heroic Mudir should by all fair means be kept in the dark. So the general tenor of the reply is evasive,—"Kindly forward the letter." Reply,—"All right; sending it on, but Gordon's messenger is in a thundering hurry to run back with that reply about the troops," and so forth. Of course, it is always within the bounds of possibility that the Mudir may be speaking the truth. Such things have been known even of Egyptians; but naturally the first impulse is to suppose the reverse. Gordon, say some people, would surely send his message in cypher; but perhaps the very fact that he is expected to do so renders it probable that—Gordon being Gordon—he would not. Then, if there is a messenger, he must himself have been in Khartoum, and would be extremely likely to have a very good idea as to what what were likely to be the most urgent contents of the letter. But why should he go to the Mudir of Dongola, of all people! Well, in the first place, because it is the nearest point from which a telegram can be sent, and in the next Gordon will surely have heard accounts of these Dongola victories by the abandoned Mudir. And being a man of large faith, and having naturally much fellow feeling with an abandoned Governor, he may have placed more trust in him than Cairenes do. However, the letter, if letter there be, should soon be at Wady Halfa, until when we must possess our souls in patience.

It may be remembered that some time ago an ingenious proposal was made to "stiffen" the Egyptian Army by the introduction of Turks. A facetious correspondent, commenting on the suggestion, hinted that the stiffening process would be suspiciously like "rigor mortis." Well, the Turks were got with some difficulty, and 200 of them were paraded with much pomp at Abdin, prior to starting for Assouan. Before, however, they arrived at the Cairo station the number had dwindled to 80, and with this remnant Colonel Grant was compelled to start. On the way between Cairo and Assiout the unspeakable Turk amused himself by firing off ball-cartridge from the train at any chance passer-by. Two of them, moreover, jumped from the train, one being killed and the other escaping. Of the remnant that remained, one half mutinied on arrival at Assiout, and the other half the next day. One act has doubtless already been recorded, but will bear repeating as one of the most daring acts ever committed by an officer bearing H.M.'s commission, though not wearing her uniform. Some 33 of the mutineers had got away, and Colonel Grant, hearing that they had proceeded down the line towards Cairo, took with him five native soldiers (by the way, the people who required stiffening seem to have done well), and leaving Major Surtees in charge of Assiout, proceeded after them. At some distance he discovered they had crossed the river and located themselves in the house of a village sheikh. Finding them there he quietly summoned them to surrender; the reply was a shot. Colonel Grant then shot his assailant, wounded two others, laid hold of a fourth, and simply cowed them into laying down their arms, marching off the whole band of "stiffeners" to Assiout. Colonel Grant cannot get the V.C., an honour which no wearer of it has more thoroughly deserved; but there are other distinctions which it is hoped may be conferred upon him. The Court for the trial of the mutineers is now sitting, composed of General Tchudi Pasha, Zohrab Bey, Mukhtar Bey, Colonel Watson, and Major Marriott, with Colonel Quick as Judge-Advocate-General, and Major Smith-Dorrien as Prosecutor. In simple justice to the Egyptians, for whose example these men were brought here, it is to be hoped that the only punishment for such conduct will, if brought home to them, be rigorously inflicted. I wish that I need not say anything more about the Egyptian soldiers than to draw attention to the contrast which their obedience to orders shows to that of the Turks; but impartiality compels me to note with regret that among the 2,000 troops at Wady Halfa, something less than 20 have recently deserted. General Grenfell is now there, and has addressed them to the subject with considerable energy, and I trust that we may have seen the first and the last of a disagreeable feature. Major and Acting Adjutant W. H. Poë, Royal Marines, has been appointed Garrison-Adjutant at Suakim from May 10 last. Lieutenant Todd Thornton has been appointed to the Mounted Infantry. Captain Sawyer, A.P.D., joined the command on the 9th inst., temporarily relieving Captain Long in the District Pay Office. Forty-six convalescents, escorted by Surgeon Laffan, have left for Cyprus.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Up to date we are congratulating ourselves on an exceptionally good season, cool and healthy. The temperature throughout India is below the average, and cholera is not reported from a single military station in the Bengal Presidency. The rains have fairly put all the weather-wise (and the Meteorological Office into the bargain) out of their reckonings, as they came upon us at the beginning of June, and now in July appear to have deserted us again. It appears that, after all, we are to have an expedition from Quetta into the Zyhob Valley; but particulars are scarce, and it seems doubtful whether the authorities themselves have quite made up their minds about it. It is announced that the force will consist of 3,000 men, and will start as soon as the weather permits; but what troops are going, and who is to command them, nobody knows. I see, however, that the Quetta Brigade, under Sir Oriel Tanner, is spoken of as being probably sufficient. They have Rattray's Sikhs there now, and are possibly to be reinforced by the 4th Punjab Infantry from Dera Ghazi Khan, which would about make up the required numbers, provided they sent a wing of the 29th from Kurrachee to Quetta to replace the 98th. This chastisement will not come a bit too soon, as the tribesmen all round Quetta are becoming very troublesome. All through the cold weather the coolies on the Hurnai road have been troubled by these people, and on June 12 they began to annoy a post of the 5th Punjab Cavalry stationed near Thall Chotiali. Three or four nights in succession they crept up to the camp; and once, when a sentry, a young soldier, instead of firing, went to alarm the duffadar of the guard, they broke into the camp and wounded a sleeping sowar. This sort of petty annoyance has been constant, and a good display of force will do wonders in teaching them that it is not safe, after all, to trifle with the sirkar. The question of a winter move towards Candahar is, of course, much discussed, and though in military circles people (perhaps because the wish is father to the thought) say it must take place, as yet no official sign has appeared which would lead one to suppose it probable. Indeed, it seems as if it was more likely to end in the invariable Boundary Commission, and one of the Indian papers got so far as to appoint one the other day. Of military men, Sir Charles Macgregor, the Quartermaster-General, who is, as every one knows, an authority on that part of the world, is the most likely choice. Sir Hugh Gough has been brought permanently on to the Brigade Staff, and is posted to Mooltan, where he relieves Brigadier-General J. H. H. Gordon, who has taken his brother's place at Rawul Pindee. Brigadier-General T. E. Gordon goes to Bareilly, and commands the Rohilcund District, vice Major-General Robert Blair, who vacates on promotion. The last-named was a "lucky" local, and got his brigade in 1880 with only 24 years' service. Colonel Nedham, of the Bengal Staff Corps, has made over the appointment of Deputy-Judge-Advocate-General at Head-quarters to Major Clementi; and Major Hutchinson, of the 14th Prince of Wales's Own, has succeeded Major Mackinnon as Assistant-Adjutant-General for Musketry at Head-quarters. The papers are beginning to talk of re-raising the disbanded native regiments; but it is not very probable that the authorities will so soon reverse their action of two years ago. Indeed, the policy seems to be to keep up a certain number of strong regiments in preference to a few more weak ones. Recruiting for the Native Army is not so easy as it used to be, and plans are already being discussed for raising the pay of the Sepoys, which is ridiculously small, particularly as the rupee has fallen in value of late years; while the men, unlike Tommy Atkins, are nearly all married, and have to support families as well. It would be very politic to help them a little in this respect. Only the other day, the authorities decided to give the non-commissioned officers and men of the British service their pay converted at the current rate of exchange, instead of at the rate of years ago; and if they recognise the justice of doing this in one service, they ought to do so for the other. Another question which is likely to crop up in earnest before long is how they propose to compensate the officers for their loss by the depreciatio of the rupee. These things take years to talk about; but as the coin in question has now fallen from 2s. 0½d. to 1s. 7½d. market value, it is time they began. There was a rumour the other day that the displaced colonels of native regiments had made good their case, and were either to be brought back or get a good compensation. If they have succeeded in putting the authorities in the wrong, they are luckier than their brethren in the British service. I saw a letter the other day strongly advocating the abolition of the Staff Corps, and the substitution of something like a regimental system. If we are to judge by the number of officiating appointments, the present system can hardly be good for officers or men, especially for the former, who do not like to refuse an appointment for fear of not getting another offer; and often have to travel half over India to take up, may be only for a few months, a billet very little better paid than their own, paying their own way, under the rules of the Indian Pay Code.

TORPEDO AND ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENTS.

The Admiralty have, for some time past, been engaged in organising the arrangement and fitting of the torpedo equipment and electrical apparatus to be supplied to her Majesty's ships, and have issued the following order relating thereto :—"The torpedo armament for each ship will be decided at the Admiralty, and communicated to the dockyards. In order to ensure uniformity in the torpedo and electrical fittings at the several dockyards, the patterns and drawings of approved fittings are to be prepared in future at Portsmouth, and the other dockyards will obtain from thence the drawings and other information necessary for their guidance. The dockyard officers at Portsmouth are to confer with the captain of the Vernon on all questions relating to changes of existing patterns, and to the introduction of the fittings necessary for new classes of ships or boats; and the original drawings, tracings, or patterns of fittings submitted for approval are to be signed by the captain of the Vernon, as well as by the Dockyard officers. The captain of the Vernon is to attend at the morning reading at the Admiral-Superintendent's office on one day in each week, to be selected by the Admiral-Superintendent, on which day he should be prepared to discuss any question that has arisen which has reference to torpedo or electric fittings. This is not to interfere with the personal intercourse between the Dockyard officers and the captain of the Vernon referred to before. The position of all electric batteries and machines, projectors and directors, the stowage of torpedo stores, the lead of electric wires, for search lights, gun and torpedo circuits, compressed air pipes, and electrical communications, &c., are to be arranged in consultation with an officer from the Department of the Director of Naval Ordnance, the fittings being carried out by the Dockyard, according to the regulations already laid down for their guidance. An officer from the Department of Naval Ordnance will occasionally visit the Dockyards to to supervise fittings in progress, and afford any assistance to the Superintendents they may desire. Tracings embodying what has been jointly arranged and agreed to by the aforesaid officers are to be forwarded to the Admiralty for approval before the work is taken in hand. When completed, and before a ship is placed in the first division of the Steam Reserve, an officer from the Department of Naval Ordnance is to inspect and test the whole of the tórpedo and electrical fittings, reporting thereon to the Director of Naval Ordnance. On the occasion of this inspection the working electric batteries of the fixed-circuits are to be charged under the superintendence of the inspecting officer, the torpedo-gunner of the Steam Reserve supplying the necessary stores. A copy of the results of testing these circuits is to be furnished to the Admiral-Superintendent for delivery to the commanding officer of the ship when commissioned. After this inspection the fittings are not to be altered without the sanction of their Lordships. Torpedo fittings of boats are to be similarly arranged, and tested on completion. When ships are paid off their torpedo and electrical fittings are to be inspected and reported on by an officer from the Department of Naval Ordnance, in order that any modifications or alterations considered desirable may be carried out during refit. Abroad this duty will be performed by the torpedo-lieutenant of the flagship."

He obtained his first commission in April, 1829; became capt., Jan., 1844; lieut.-col., Jan., 1855; col., 1863; major-gen., March, 1868; gen., Oct. 1, 1877; and was placed on the Retired List in July, 1881. He was appointed col.-comdt. Oct. 1, 1877.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. A strong draft of the 1st Batn. is in readiness to embark for India in the Malabar, to join the 2nd Batn. The officers are Major Gibbs (in command), Capt. Longbourne, and Lieut. Smythe. Messrs. Caffin and Co., Regent Street, have just executed for the officers a handsome memorial tablet to the memory of Major N. F. Mansergh. The design consists of the colours of the regiment hanging over a mediæval shield and the badge, carved in bold relief in white Carrara marble, surmounted on a background of Belgian St. Anne's marble. On the shield is carved the coat-of-arms of the deceased officer and the following inscription:—"Erected by his brother-officers, in affectionate remembrance of Neville Frederick Mansergh, major, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, born Aug. 28, 1845; who died on April 9, 1883. 'Thy brother shall rise again.'—St. John, xi., 23." The work reflects great credit on the sculptors, both for their excellency in design and workmanship.

7th Royal Fusiliers. Major Tottenham is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., on promotion.

8th (King's Liverpool Regiment). The 1st Batn. gave an enjoyable afternoon party on the 26th ult., in the paddock of the Cork Park Race-course, where the regimental band played for the visitors. The invitations were numerous and the weather perfect. Many sets of lawn-tennis were kept going with great vigour. In a room on the grand stand, with a well-prepared floor, and flags prettily suspended, dancing was carried on to the strains of the band of the 32nd L.I. The battalion is under orders for the Curragh, and is now likely to move immediately. It was inspected on Monday last by Major-Gen. Young, commanding the Cork District, who expressed his thorough satisfaction with the appearance of the regiment. Good-conduct medals have been presented to Ptes. Rowbotham and Webling, F Company. He was also at the bombardment and surrender of Kinburn (medal with clasp, Turkish medal, and Knighthood of the Legion of Honour). He was promoted to a captaincy in 1859, obtained the brevet rank of major in 1872, and was with his regiment from 1878 to 1880 in the Afghan war, being present at the capture of Ali Musjid. ROYAL MARINES.

The treatment of the Marines in Egypt forms the subject of a letter to the Hampshire Telegraph, the statements in which certainly should be enquired into:—"On June 18 the Loch Ard, ice-ship, arrived at Suakim, bringing Lieut.-Col. Way and the rest of the Marines from Port Said. They came as far as Suez in the P. and O. steamship Khedive, and then the Gilsland business was repeated, for if ever sardines were packed in a box the poor 'Jollies' were packed in a tub, mules, poultry, carts, and very little ice being added as a bonne bouche for a trip in the Red Sea. The Arabs call the mirage bahr el sheitan, 'the devil's sea,' and the Marines call the Loch Ard 'the devil's ice-ship,' for some of the men have only had the pleasure of seeing ice in the distance, whilst the officers have had the pleasure of tasting it twice in 19 days. The whole thing is a fraud, for whilst the people in England think their sailors and Marines are being looked after, they live like dogs in a place that troops of the Line cannot live in. On the 19th the Loch Ard was ordered to convey Marines for Suez under the command of Major Rose. Before starting, a very just complaint was made as to the insufficient accommodation for officers and men, which resulted in the Iris being ordered to take Capt. Robin's company. The same old story would have again been repeated, that anything is good enough for the Marines, but thanks to the principal medical officer it was frustrated. The officers at Suez are: Major Rose, Capts. Bridge, Gordon, Robins; Lieuts. Roche, Darling, David, Stamper; Dr. Porter."

Col.-Comdt. Blanckley has directed that the two "fancy fairs" in Phœnix Street, Stonehouse, are to be placed "out of bounds," and the non-commissioned officers and men of the Plymouth Division are cautioned not to frequent those places.

50th Queen's Own (Royal West Kent Regiment). Head-quarters and the half-battalion at Cyprus are under orders to join remainder of the regiment at Alexandria.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Head-quarters and a half-battalion of the 3rd Batn. proceeds from Egypt to Cyprus.

67th Hampshire Regiment. The account of the shooting of this battalion, which has just completed the annual course of 1883-84, at Cannanore, Madras, is as satisfactory as ever. At the end of 1883 the following General Order was published:—"Taking the figures of merit of battalions serving at home, in the Colonies and India, this battalion stands No. 2 on the list of all the British infantry regiments exercised in 1882-83." In the present course of 1883-84, the individual firing alone shows an increase of ·126 on every round fired. The best shooting company is letter "A," or Capt. Garfitt's company, with the high figure of merit of 244·50. The figure of merit of the battalion, which officially is abolished, is 239·46. This battalion is under orders to proceed to Secunderabad from Cannanore next November. The march will occupy about 58 days. Secunderabad will probably be the regiment's last station in India, as it has already entered its 12th year of service abroad.

Army Medical Department. Twenty-one surgeons (on probation) will join at Aldershot on Monday next, for a course of instruction in Army Hospital Corps drill, equitation, &c. Surgs. C. E. Faunce and W. Dick are in readiness to embark for Egypt immediately.

Pay Department. During the discussion of the Army Estimates last Monday, Mr. Whitley invited attention to the grievances of the officers of the Army Pay Department, who were not represented at the War Office. They were debarred from many advantages which were enjoyed by the Commissariat, Ordnance, and Medical Departments. At present, in consequence of the smallness of the number of chief paymasters, men who had been from 25 to 30 years in the Army got no promotion. He asked whether it would not be possible to increase them, say, from 15 to 20. If that were done, and if also staff paymasters received the honorary rank of lieutenant-colonel after five years' service as staff paymaster, it would gratify a large number of very efficient officers, and also strengthen the Department to which they belonged. Sir A. Hayter, in reply, said there had been a general revision of the whole of the paymasters' duties, and it had resulted in the new warrant, which had lately been issued, and in an increase in the number of chief paymasters from 12 to 15. He could assure the hon. Member that they had no desire whatever to limit the expense; but they were bound to look to the exact facts of the case. It had been found that it was not necessary, as it had been contended, that there should always be a chief paymaster in every district where there was a general officer. They had found three places where they were required, Hong Kong, Aldershot, and Barbadoes. He could not hold out any hope that the number would be extended beyond 15. In reference to the second point, that the hon. rank of the Paymasters' Department should be altered, and that the rank of lieut.-col. should be given to the Staff paymasters after five years' service, he stated that at present the chief paymasters ranked with lieut.-cols., and that they became cols. in the Army after five years. The Staff paymasters ranked with majors, and the ordinary paymasters with capts. It was only recently that the hon. rank of lieut.-col. had been given to the chief paymasters, and the War Office authorities felt, after consultation with the military branch, that it was too much for the paymasters to expect that the rank of lieut.-col. should be given to Staff paymasters as a matter of right after five years' service.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Stevens has taken over the duties of Instructor at the School of Instruction at Aldershot, for officers (on probation) of the Commissariat and Transport Staff, vice Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Young, ordered to Netley.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

King's (Liverpool Regiment). Colours have been presented to the 3rd and 4th Batns. The Liverpool Courier points out that the regiment had a presentation of colours in 1854, but being converted into a rifle corps in 1855 ceased to carry colours. In 1881 they were reconverted into "red coats," and should have had colours at once, but for some reason the presentation was delayed until this training. At the time the 2nd Lancashire was divided into two battalions it was about 1,200 strong, but this year the muster is about half that number, and this is not the only instance in the Kingdom where the Militia have lost ground under the "improved organisation."

West Riding Regiment. The 3rd and 4th Batns. assembled at Halifax on Monday for training. The following officers were present:—Lieut.-Cols. Wemyss and Stansfeld; Majors Trevelyan and Daubeny; Capts. Stovell, Rouse, Wyllie, Douglas, Bruce, Adams, and Coates; Lieuts. Cordes, Kynnersley-Gardner, C. W. Butler, Wood, Whitla, Mitchell, Lister, Essell, and Moke. The strength of the 3rd Batn. on assembly was 370, and that of the 4th Batn. was 450.

Manchester Regiment. The 3rd and 4th Batns. assembled at Ashton-under-Lyne on Monday, and proceeded to Fairfield, Buxton, for the annual training. The strength of the 3rd Batn. was 18 officers and 500 non-commissioned officers and men, and the 4th Batn. 18 officers and 560 non-commissioned officers and men. The following officers were present:—Lieut.-Col. Chambers and Hon. Col. Wray; Majors Mercier, Garland-Matthews, Powell, and Trimmer; Capts. Braybrooke, Taylor, Burney (hon. major), Chambers, Dunlop, Bainbridge, Foley, Woodhouse, and Symonds; Lieuts. Leyden, J. H. Holme, J. R. Holme, Langton, Elger, Daniell, Morton, and Street.

Rifle Brigade. The 8th Batn., under Lieut.-Col. Hanley, was inspected on Thursday at Carrick-on-Shannon by Col. Hercy, commanding the 88th Regtl. District. The battalion paraded in marching order at half-past 10 o'clock; afterwards the books, kits, barracks, hospital, &c., were minutely inspected. At 3 o'clock the battalion paraded in review order. The manœuvres were brought to a close by the adjutant putting the battalion through some movements in extended order, when the inspecting officer said:—"Col. Hanley and officers of the 8th Batn. Rifle Brigade,—When I entered your town last evening, and saw the smart and soldierlike manner in which you behaved in the streets, I expected to see a very good regiment on parade; but I was not prepared for the manner in which you drilled to-day. I am highly pleased,—in fact, nothing could have been better, and I have never seen anything better. Your marching was very good indeed. When inspecting your kits this morning I found them very clean, and the men also, and I am not much given to praise. I may say, in conclusion, that you are the best Militia regiment that I have inspected in my district, and great credit is due to you, and those who have the superintendence of you. I congratulate you and them, and shall have much pleasure in reporting my opinion in the proper quarter."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Volunteer Service Gazette very properly comments on the refusal to allow a Volunteer review in Hyde Park in 1880 for fear of damage to trees, plants, turf, &c., stoppage of traffic in the streets, and various other reasons, while a political demonstration was actually facilitated by the authorities on the 21st ult. Our contemporary might have gone further, and pointed out that the Volunteers asked for leave and were refused. The politicians did not ask for leave, and their proceedings were aided by the authorities. What a nice lesson in discipline!

The Liverpool Courier points out that according to the Volunteer Regulations of 1884 there appears to be a change as to the conditions of retiring rank. Article 314 says that if recommended, "permission to retain their rank and wear the uniform of their regiment will be granted to officers who retire after 15 years' commissioned service." In the corresponding regulation, No. 336, of 1881, occur the words, "provided the last three years of such service shall have been in the rank held on retirement." This proviso is now, therefore, cancelled.

An invitation having been received from the Dominion of Canada Artillery Association for a detachment of British Artillery Volunteers to proceed to Quebec, to take part in the artillery competitions to be held there in September next, the following have been selected to represent Great Britain:—Lieut.-Col. Ray, 3rd Middlesex (in command); Capts. Cameron, 4th Durham, and Allen, 4th W. York. 2nd Durham—Serjt. J. Greives, Corpl. R. Fields, Bombardier W. Hedley, Gunners R. Spence and S. Wright. 4th Durham—Serjts. W. W. Bastow, G. F. Berry, and C. J. Smyth. 1st Kent—Corpls. W. Gregory and W. Blomfield. 2nd Middlesex—Baty. Serjt.-Major C. M. Hodgson, Serjt. E. C. Clark, and Bombardier F. J. Puzey. 3rd Middlesex—Qrmr.-Serjt. G. W. Garard. 2nd Northumberland (Percy)—Baty. Serjt.-Major T. Watson. 1st Sussex—Gunner G. E. Adams. 2nd East York—Corpl. W. H. Pratt, Gunners G. Rea, R. W. Robinson, and F. Shepherdson. 4th West York—Baty. Serjt.-Major W. Taylor and Serjt. J. Greenwood. It is announced that the Queen has presented £100, and the Prince of Wales £25, towards the fund being created by the National Artillery Association to meet the necessary expenses of the British detachment.

(Where not otherwise stated, the foregoing commissions and announcements bear date August 2, and the current year must be understood.)

The annual distribution of prizes took place this week at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, in the presence of a large assemblage of visitors, the Rev. J. H. Lang, M.A., V.P., in the chair. The great school-room was decorated with evergreens and flags, the latter kindly lent by Mr. Jackson, of the General Steam Navigation Company. The report of the Rev. R. Ewing, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, appointed by the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, stated that there was not much change in the work of the school, as compared with last year; but that he noticed a decided improvement in Greek translation and algebra. The Rev. James White, the head master, in distributing the prizes, gave a general analysis of the work done, and described the way in which the pupils had gained their distinctions. Before the proceedings closed, Mr. Alfred Eames, the secretary, who was most warmly received, took leave of the pupils and parents on his retirement after more than half a century's service, and expressed his earnest wishes for the welfare of the school, his affection for which, he said, would only cease with his life. The Rev. J. H. Lang having, on the part of the Council, borne testimony to the great services of Mr. Eames, the meeting closed with ringing cheers for the head master, secretary, and council. Retired Lieut. Chamberlain, R.N., succeeds Mr. Alfred Eames as secretary of the school.

The French cruiser Hamelin has run on to a hard sandbank whilst endeavouring to make the port of Foochow. The damage done is said to be considerable, and it is doubtful if she will be able to get to Hong Kong for repairs.

A Parliamentary return shows that during the year 1882 there were 213 courts-martial held on 232 seamen and Marines of the Royal Navy, of whom 13 were sentenced to penal servitude, 188 to imprisonment and dismissal with or without disgrace, 119 to imprisonment with hard labour, 2 were dismissed the service, 1 was disrated, 3 were severely reprimanded, 1 was sentenced to "No. 10A Admiralty punishment," and 5 were acquitted. The number of summary punishments inflicted in the same period was 25,759 at home, and 27,630 on foreign stations. There were 515 courts-martial in addition held on Marines at head-quarters, and with the battalions in Egypt and Ireland, and imprisonment was inflicted on 378 non-commissioned officers and men. The number of minor punishments inflicted on Marines serving ashore was 3,315.

It is with regret we have to announce the death of Lieut. F. G. S. Laye, who was left behind at Kirkwall from the Hector, suffering from typhoid fever, when the Reserve Squadron left for Ireland. There is a very general feeling throughout the Squadron that a medical officer should have been left to take charge of Lieut. Laye, instead of relegating him to a general hospital.

A committee of officers, consisting of Col. Smith, C.B. Grenadier Guards, Col. Gildea, Royal Scots Fusiliers, and Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, R.E., members, has been ordered to assemble at the camp to consider details of a design for new barracks, and to report whether they consider them adequate for the wants of a regiment.

The Standard learns that "The Queen has approved of Major-Gen. Macdonald, commanding the troops in North Britain, being selected to attend the forthcoming manœuvres of the Austrian Army. He will be accompanied by Col. Wood, 10th Hussars."

In these "piping times" of hot days and nights the prospect of having pure ice at a cheap rate is very pleasant if quickly realised. We are promised the luxury in a programme which will be found elsewhere, and which appeared in our columns last week with names, and figures, and facts which augur success. Messrs. Pontifex and Wood, Mr. Christiansen, Mr. Sweetland, &c., these are names to conjure ice in plenty with. We verily believe that the enterprise has all the elements of prosperity about it, and that we shall have pure ice at will when the company begins to work, if not for a song, in plenty for sixpence.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1884.

THE Mudir of Dongola, for whom we have all along persistently "stuck up," as our readers may do us the justice to recollect, when he was assailed by the correspondents of the London papers in Cairo and Alexandria as a traitor to the Khedive and as an agent of the Mahdi, stands forth at last as a valiant, faithful, energetic officer and administrator; but then it would never do for the correspondents who blackened his reputation to admit that an Egyptian Mudir could do his duty for duty's sake, and so they discover a reason for his fidelity in the fact that he possesses property in the district he is defending. But surely if he were minded to make terms with the Mahdi, he could secure his property much more certainly than he is doing by holding out for the Khedive, who is unable to help him. We remember when Arabi was in power the correspondents accused him of robbing the public treasure, and Vanity Fair and other papers declared he was putting his hand into the till to enrich himself. Not one expression of regret was ever printed for the scandalous falsehoods, when it was proved that Arabi had never touched a stiver of the public money, and that he went into exile a beggar. In the same way, the Mudir of Dongola, who is, we believe, a Circassian, has been accused of treason and falsehood, and villainous complicity with the Mahdi, and if it should turn out that he is not in the least degree open to suspicion, there will be not a word said about the unjust charges sent by cable to London against him,—not a line of recantation or penitence. Elsewhere will be found a letter from our able Cairo correspondent, which gives an amusing résumé of the state of public opinion in that lively capital respecting the Mudir and his news, combined with the opinions attributed to Stanley respecting Gordon's position. We may conclude that the intelligence from Khartoum will fortify the Government in their resolve to do nothing very aggressive just yet in the way of relieving their fighting and disobedient Lieutenant; but if Gordon emerges out of the desert of Meröe raging like a lion at the head of his faithful Soudanese, Berbers, and Egyptians, and joins hands with the advance guard of the Khedive's Anglo-Egyptians, the Government can take no credit for the apparition, and will probably gain very little by the motion of their neglected emissary; nor will Gordon be at all likely to spare them. Although he is no orator, and ought not to be let write with a view to publication, he can furnish whole armouries to those who can use his weapons. It is, however, not likely, though it is by no means impossible, that he has retaken Berber. The Mahdi and he experience the same difficulties in regard to long marches from their base. If the Mahdi's story be true, we shall soon have Gordon's views of the situation and the latest authentic and direct intelligence which has come to hand from him since last March.

We are glad to learn that the health of Colonel Sir Robert Loyd-Lindsay, M.P., has greatly improved of late.

It is proposed to arm the drivers of the Royal Horse Artillery and Field Batteries with swords. A trial will shortly be made of the Martini-Henry sword-bayonet for this purpose at Aldershot.

A novel spectacle will be witnessed at King's Norton, a pretty village five miles from Birmingham, next week, when the boys from the Destitute Boys' Home, who are trained under military discipline, go under canvas for six days. The tents have been lent by the War Office, and every routine of camp and guard duty will be strictly carried out, even to the cooking, by the little soldiers. The average height of the company is about 5 ft., and the age about 15½. These homes have already sent some good recruits to the Army.

Another Marine officer has been appointed to the General Staff of the Army, in the person of Captain Burnett Hall, Royal Marine Artillery, late one of the Instructors in Military Tactics at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, who has been nominated Garrison-Instructor at Fermoy.

It is generally known that it has not been a source of much pleasure to the Brigade of Guards for some time past that their battalions should be attached to the Aldershot command for disciplinary purposes during their temporary sojourn at Pirbright. An effort is being made to throw off this yoke, and to move the powers-that-be to order that any body or bodies of the Foot Guards stationed at Pirbright shall be attached to the Home District for discipline, &c.

The post of Instructor in Tactics, &c., at the Royal Military College is about to fall vacant, Lieutenant-Colonel Moorsom, R.A., vacating it on September 1.

Experimental field-firing by companies has been carried out during the week by several Infantry battalions at Aldershot, with good results. Under the new system, which is now being tried experimentally, it will be impossible to carry out these exercises in a perfunctory manner. Formerly it was the custom at Aldershot to publish, that all might read, the result of the annual brigade field-firing exercises at that station. This has been discontinued during recent years,—the reason is pretty well understood.

Major J. H. G. Browne, R.A., is to have an extension of his period of appointment as Garrison-Instructor at the Curragh.

Instructions have been issued to officers commanding at all stations regarding the precautions to be taken against a cholera epidemic in this country, and reports have been called for showing the sites selected for encampment in the vicinity of the several barracks.

At the approaching annual inspections by the Inspector of Army Signalling (Major M. T. Thrupp), the regimental signallers will be tested in "reading the lamp," the Assistant-Instructor "sending" on a lamp, as with the small flag. This work with the lamps will be reckoned in the "figure of merit." The course of instruction of the 60th Army Signalling Class at Aldershot (the last which will assemble this season), will shortly be brought to a conclusion.

They seem to have rather a slack way of doing things in Bermuda, judging from the following description, as seen from the veranda of the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club. A baggage-waggon appears in sight, escorted by a corporal and four men of the Royal Engineers, the men in straw hats, no belts, dirty kerseys, and carrying their helmets in their hands, sword-bayonets fixed, some with their scabbards on, others without. Soon after the remainder of the party appear, dressed in the same style, except that some of the men wear white trousers. They proceed to embark under the superintendence of an officer of the Royal Engineers.

Lieutenant-General Browne, Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will be appointed Colonel Commandment of the Royal Engineers, vice General Ford, deceased.

As an instance of improvement in the Militia under the new system, the Liverpool Courier draws attention to the 3rd Battalion, Liverpool Regiment. At the time the regiment was divided into two battalions it mustered 1,200 strong. At the last inspection half that number appeared under arms. In other words, the only effect of the Territorial system has been to reduce this regiment to half its former strength. And yet there are those who profess to think that Territorialism will prove beneficial to the Militia.

The officers of the Army Pay Department are becoming, very naturally, somewhat indignant at the delay that has taken place in gazetting a successor to Lieutenant-Colonel and Chief Paymaster Lukin, that officer having been placed on retired pay from April 16 in the Gazette of May 2—just three months ago. It is true that in the Gazette of May 20, which granted rewards for the operations in the Soudan, Major and Staff Paymaster Farwell was made a Chief Paymaster for services in that country from May 21, but not in succession to Lieutenant-Colonel Lukin. Apart, then, from the fact that Lieutenant-Colonel Lukin's successor must in any case lose the difference in the allowances between Lieutenant-Colonel and Major for three and a half months, this dilatory conduct shows an utter disregard of the feelings and rights of officers. As the date of the retirement of an officer is known months beforehand in and out of the War Office, surely there can be no possible reason why a Staff Paymaster should not be selected and promoted within a week or ten days of the Gazette which announces the retirement of his predecessor.

A special General Order has been issued, that except in very special circumstances, permission to join a four-months' class for garrison instruction will be limited to those officers who have entered the service without any previous professional training, and have not had an opportunity of attending a course of instruction. General officers commanding will be guided accordingly in preparing the lists due on August 1 and February 1 of each year.

Major Groves, 50th Regiment, has been appointed a Garrison-Instructor in Egypt, and is in readiness for immediate embarkation.

Under the forthcoming Warrant, Captains on full pay will be allowed to enter the Pay Department for five years' service, the same as in the Commissariat and Transport Staff and Ordnance Store Department, being seconded and receiving steps of promotion in the ordinary course of regimental seniority. It is expected that this concession will attract many officers to the Department who now hold aloof from it, in consequence of the uncertainty as to whether or not the duties would be congenial, and the impossibility of returning to their regiments if they are not.

We have read some papers in reference to the grievances of Mr. W. Tayler (of Patna, in the time of the Mutiny), which contain, inter alia, very grave charges against Sir F. Halliday; and without entering further on the consideration of the gravamina, we venture to express an opinion that it would be quite consistent with the dignity of even an ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to show that Mr. Tayler is under a hallucination as regards the disappearance of his records and other matters. It is a sorry sight to see an old servant, who did good work in his time and who won golden opinions from the best men in India, seated in the dust at our feet, and calling for justice.

The use of carrier-pigeons may be described as "Continental." If England were invaded carrier-pigeons would be useful; but when England invades, and sends expeditions to distant countries, the services of the winged messengers could not be turned to account.

Colonel Montgomery, Scots Guards, has resigned his appointment as Military Secretary to Lieutenant-General Smyth, commanding in South Africa.

The erection of the Wellington Monument will at once be proceeded with at Aldershot, the site chosen for the monument being between the Head-quarter Huts and the Cambridge Hospital, overlooking the Camp and town.

It is a pity Mr. Dawnay marred the effect of a good speech in a good cause by "slanging" the Boers. He is very young, and very "hot" apparently, and his strong feelings for his friends, and his just indignation at the miserable muddle in Zululand, no doubt led him to indulge in very unjust and indiscriminate verbal outrages on the Dutchmen who introduced law and order, as he may read in Sir Bartle Frere's interesting memoir, hundreds of years before there was an Englishman in South Africa, for no possible advantage. There are bad Boers and good Boers, and the tender mercies of the wicked colonists of any nation bear a strong family likeness to each other.

Major Clarke, Professor of Military Administration and Law at the Staff College, leaves England on the 20th inst. for Ceylon, to take up the appointment of Surveyor-General in that Colony.

Lieutenant F. Stone, R.A., has been appointed an Instructor in Tactics, &c., at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

General Cameron's letter to the Times (July 25) should surely attract the notice and secure the co-operation of the officers of Militia regiments who are now out for their training. The Militia as well as the Volunteers are somewhat personally interested in the Corps of Commissionaires. They admit not only the wounded (which, perhaps, is no great advantage to them, as they run little risk), but, on the other hand, the Corps allows the training serjeants of these branches of the service to join at a later age than is usual without paying any extra fee for over age. Indirectly, all are interested in the success of the Corps, as it is quite clear that the better places men get after quitting the service, the better men who will enlist. There is one Colonel in particular who (General Cameron thinks) ought to have done something towards the fund he raised, viz., Colonel Stanley, our late War Minister; but we think the claims to help and support are far wider and larger, and that there is a moral obligation on the branches of the service to aid the Corps which does so much for all who can help themselves, when they have done their duty to the country.

Very interesting reports have come to hand from Major Stuart Wortley and Lieutenant-Colonel Colville, who have made very trying marches through the Desert; but the exact object of the expedition, which has cost so far nearly £10,000 to the Egyptian Government, is not very plain to us.

Major Borthwick, Rifle Brigade, has been appointed Chief Constable of Mid and West Lothian.

The Distinguished Service Reward, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General Turner as Colonel-Commandant, Royal Artillery, has been conferred on Major-General Pennycuick, R.A. General Pennycuick obtained his first commission in May, 1847, and is decorated for the Crimean, Indian Mutiny, and Chinese campaigns.

Major Kensington took up duty as Professor of Artillery at the Royal Military Academy from the 1st inst.

It is difficult to understand how the Varna correspondent of a German paper should be the first to get the news of a rising in Yemen, and of the despatch of 10,000 troops to quell it. We think it advisable to "perpend" ere we accept the statement.

The thanks of the officers of the Army Pay Department are certainly due to Mr. Whitley, the hard-working Member for Liverpool, for the strenuous endeavours he has made to obtain from the War Office a redression of wrongs. Until Mr. Whitley took matters in hand, the Pay Department was in a very bad way, and it has been due to his persistent advocacy of the claims of the officers of the Department that they have one by one been recognised. Mr. Whitley has set an example to the military champions. When he has put a question, and received an evasive answer, he has not rested satisfied, but has returned to the charge, the result being that Sir Arthur Hayter has been compelled to give in all down the line. The War Office, to be sure, had a very weak case; but the Department should be none the less grateful to the hon. Member for having so zealously fought its battles against what appeared at first to be unsurmountable difficulties.

Euryalus, Capt. Hastings, flagship of Sir W. Hewett, arrived at the Mauritius on July 11. The Dragon was at Karachi on July 5. The Philomel was at Ras-al-Had on June 28. The Arab was at Berberah on July 15. The Ranger left Berberah for Aden on July 15.

Flamingo, Com. Custance, was at Port Royal on July 10, having arrived there on the 7th from her cruise round the island, and it is understood she leaves on the 14th for the north side again. He chief engineer, Mr. Cocking, has been sent to hospital suffering from jaundice, and will probably come home in the mail of the 24th.

Hector, Capt. Arthur, arrived at Cowes on July 28, to act as guardship during the stay of the Queen at Osborne.

Inflexible, Capt. Seymour, went to Suda Bay on July 26; would return in ten days to Malta.

Kestrel, Com. Tisdale (act.), was paid off at Sheerness on Wednesday, July 30, after having been employed on the China Station since September, 1873, since which time she has been twice re-commissioned at Hong Kong.

Pegasus, Capt. Bickford, left Penang on July 31 for Acheen, on a mission to the Rajah of Tenom, having for its object the release of the crew of the steamer Nisero.

Sapphire. Capt. Fullerton having been selected for the command of the Royal yacht, will be relieved by Capt. Kinahan.

Sphinx, Com. Caffin, flying the broad pennant of Comdre. Molyneux, was at Suakim with the Briton, Tyne, Woodlark, Myrmidon, Albacore, Condor, and Humber, up to July 14. The Briton would proceed to East Indies station on the arrival of the Dolphin. The Woodlark has since arrived at Aden. The Condor was visiting Kosseir, and was ordered to return to Suakim, viâ Jeddah.

Sultan, Capt. Tracey, arrived at Leith on July 29, to carry out a series of machine-gun experiments.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, with the Mutine in company, left Callao on Sunday, May 4. After clearing the land fires were drawn, and all plain sail made to a favourable breeze. The Swiftsure crossed the Equator in longitude 100 west, only 14 days out. In the evening the wind fell light, and steam was raised. The next two days were spent in the annual prize-firing, after which sail was again made, and on Sunday, June 8, sighted the southernmost point of the Sandwich Islands, having covered a distance of 5,000 miles in 35 days, nearly the whole of which was done under sail. This certainly speaks well for the sailing qualities of the Swiftsure as an ironclad. About noon on the same day the Mutine was despatched under steam to Honolulu with and for despatches, and the Swiftsure arrived there on the following evening. On the following day, were honoured by a visit from the King and also from the British Commissioner. During the fortnight's stay both officers and men had a most enjoyable experience. Invitations to the officers were received almost daily from the King, the British Commissioner, and official and other residents to attend dinners, balls, and riding excursions into the country, and leave was freely given to the ships' companies, so that they might have every opportunity for enjoyment ashore. Honolulu is in itself a very quiet place, and is remarkable for the sobriety of its people. There are, perhaps, two principal reasons for this, one being that the drinking-houses are singularly few in number, and the other that the price of intoxicants is unusually high. A glass of ale, for instance, cannot be purchased for less than 1s., so that if the desire existed for getting drunk, the drunkard would find it a very expensive luxury. Public-house licences, also, cost large sums of money, so that all the conditions are in favour of temperance, especially as temperance drinks are easily obtainable, and at very little cost. She left, with the Mutine in company, for Esquimault on June 25.

Turquoise, Capt. Woodward, arrived at Jeddah on Saturday last, to relieve the Tourmaline on the coast of Madagascar. She touched at Suakim on July 2, and would proceed on July 30 to Massowah with Mason Bey, the Governor of that place, on board.

Vigilant, Lieut. and Com. Maxwell, with the Commander-in-Chief on board, was, by accounts, dated June 9, visiting the ports in Yangtse River. The Audacious was at Woosung on June 4, would remain while the Commander-in-Chief visits the Yangtse ports in the Vigilant, and would subsequently cruise with the evolutionary squadron. The Cleopatra had left Woosung for Nagasaki to be docked, was ordered to return to Woosung not later than June 18, and would then be stationed at Shanghai as senior officer's ship. The Curacoa was at Shanghai on June 4, would remain until the return of the Cleopatra from Nagasaki, and would then join the cruising squadron. The Midge was at Tientsin on May 21, was about to visit Newchwang, returning to Tientsin about June 2, and was ordered to be at Chefoo on July 1 to join the cruising squadron. The Fly was at Kinkiang on June 9, was ordered to proceed to Hankow, and would remain. The Albatross was at Hankow on June 9; ordered to proceed to Woosung and join the cruising squadron. The Cockchafer was at Chefoo on May 26; ordered to proceed on June 20 to Cheumlpho, Corea, and to return to Chefoo by July 1 to join the cruising squadron. The Espoir was at Shanghai on June 4; ordered to join the cruising squadron. The Sapphire, senior officer's ship in Japan, was at Yokohama on May 10, and would remain in the neighbourhood, but was ordered to be at Woosung by June 20 to join the cruising squadron. The Champion was at Hong Kong on May 23 in dockyard hands, refitting; she would be ready for sea about June 15, and was then to be stationed at Amoy; she left for Amoy on June 14. The Daring was at Hong Kong on May 23, to give leave and carry out rifle prize firing, having been relieved temporarily by the Tweed; she would afterwards return to Canton. The Swift was at Amoy on May 23; would proceed to join the cruising squadron at Woosung, leaving Amoy on June 20. The Linnet was in the Gulf of Tonquin on May 23, visiting Hoihow and Pakhoi alternately; ordered to remain until relieved by the Zephyr, and then to proceed to Hong Kong. The Foxhound was at Hong Kong on May 23; ordered to proceed to Singapore, calling at North Borneo ports and Labuan, so as to reach Singapore the first week in July. The Merlin was stationed at Foochow on May 23; ordered to visit Formosan ports monthly. The Tweed was at Canton on May 23, commissioned temporarily as tender to the Champion, and manned from that ship; would remain at Canton in the absence of the Daring; returned to Hong Kong on June 6, and placed in reserve on June 10. The Pegasus was in the Straits of Malacca on May 1; on arrival of the Wanderer from England, would proceed to Hong Kong. The Zephyr was at Singapore on May 1; ordered to proceed about the second week in June to the Gulf of Tonquin to relieve the Linnet. THE DEFENCE COURT-MARTIAL.

On Tuesday morning a court-martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide, at Plymouth, for the trial of Capt. Edward James Pollard, of the Defence. The Court was presided over by Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme, Admiral-Superintendent of the Dockyard, and the other members present were Capts. R. Carter, of H.M.S. Royal Adelaide; L. F. Jones, of the Belleisle; G. S. Bosanquet, of the Cambridge; E. Kelly, of the Indus; E. S. Adeane, of the Shannon; R. O'B. FitzRoy, C.B., of the Hercules; G. Robinson, of the Penelope; J. E. M. Wilson, of the Impregnable; and Mr. H. H. Shanks, officiating Judge-Advocate. The Hon. Bernard Coleridge, of the Western Circuit, appeared as the prisoner's friend, and objected to Capt. Adeane sitting upon the Court, on the ground that he was present at a court of inquiry which was held to report upon the present charge, and his mind must, therefore, be biassed, and not free from prejudice on the present inquiry. The Court was cleared, and at the end of a few minutes was reopened, when the Judge-Advocate announced that the objection of the prisoner had been allowed by the Court, and Capt. Adeane was accordingly requested to withdraw. Mr. Coleridge then objected to Capt. Jones, and Capt. Kennedy, of the Lord Warden, was directed to take his place. Rear-Admiral Curme was then objected to, on the ground that he officiated as president of a former court of inquiry held on Capt. Pollard. Since that time they had, Mr. Coleridge said, been on bad terms, and Capt. Pollard had reason to believe that the mind of Rear-Admiral Curme was biassed against him. The court was cleared, and at the end of one hour and a half's consultation was reopened. The Judge-Advocate then read the following decision:—"The Court, having considered the objection raised by the prisoner, have decided to disallow it on the ground that the case referred to had no connection whatever with the present investigation. The prisoner's charge that since that time he and the president had been on bad terms, and that the president's mind was biassed, he (the president) on his part distinctly repudiates; but having reference to the peculiar circumstances and the position in which the president is placed by the prisoner's statement, the Court hereby resolves to adjourn until the receipt of further directions." The Court accordingly adjourned. Her Majesty's ship Agincourt, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral White, left Portland on Tuesday evening for Plymouth, to enable Admiral White to preside at the court-martial.

The Court reassembled on Wednesday with Rear-Admiral Whyte as president. Capt. Pollard stands charged with negligently or by other default hazarding his ship on July 18, by allowing her to come into collision with her Majesty's ship Valiant. When the Court opened, in addition to the president, the following officers were present:—Capts. R. Carter, of the Royal Adelaide; L. F. Jones, of the Belleisle; G. S. Bosanquet, of the Cambridge; E. Kelly, of the Indus; E. S. Adeane, of the Shannon; R. FitzRoy, of the Hercules; G. Robinson, of the Penelope; and J. M. Wilson, of the Impregnable. The warrant directing Admiral Whyte to preside was dated the 29th inst., and was signed by Sir A. C. Key, Senior Naval Lord, and Rear-Admiral Brandreth. After reading the warrant, the officiating Judge-Advocate, Mr. H. H. Shanks, asked if Capt. Pollard had any objection to the officers constituting the Court. The Hon. Bernard Coleridge said he objected to Capt. Adeane on the ground that he was present at a former inquiry relating to the collision. That was a sufficient objection in law. The Court was cleared, and on its being reopened the officiating Judge-Advocate said the objection was admitted, and unless the prisoner had any objection, Capt. J. G. Mead, of the Agincourt, would take Capt. Adeane's place. Mr. Coleridge said he had no objection to Capt. Mead, but he did object to Capt. Jones, on the same grounds that he had urged against the presence of Capt. Adeane. The Court was again cleared, and on reopening the Judge-Advocate announced that the Court also admitted the objection to Capt. Jones, and that his place would be taken by Capt. Kennedy, of the Lord Warden, unless the prisoner's friend raised any objection. Mr. Coleridge said he had no objection to raise to the Court as newly constituted.

Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins was then examined, and said he was in command of the First Reserve Squadron at sea off the coast of Ireland on July 18 last. The prisoner was in command of the Defence, one of the ships of the Squadron. At 8 p.m., on July 18, the Squadron was in column of three divisions line ahead, the columns two cables apart, and the ships in close order. About 8 o'clock, or shortly after, he desired the flag-lieutenant to make signals of two divisions in line ahead. The signal became executive, according to the log, at 8.15 p.m. According to his written memorandum, duly promulgated on the assembling of the Squadron at Portland on June 16 last, the formation of the Squadron was duly understood. It provided that the Defence should take the second place in the first division. He witnessed the commencement of the evolution from the sternwalk of the Hercules, but at that moment the captain brought in the chart with the ships' positions on it for 8 o'clock, and asked him to decide the course for the Squadron for the night. Having no misgiving, he went into the after cabin to decide upon the course. The evolution was performed by the Defence, exactly reversing the procedure in the memorandum. The only possible way to perform the manœuvre was for the Defence to incline to what then became the second division, to diminish speed, and drop into her station, as was done by the other ships. When the Defence had inclined about two points he went into the fore cabin, and saw nothing more until the flag-lieutenant reported to him that the Defence had fouled the Valiant. He immediately looked out of the sternwalk, and at that time the Defence's port bow appeared to be pressing against the Valiant's quarter about the mizzen chains, and her foretopgallant mast and jibboom were broken. There was no signal made about the distance the columns were to be apart, and therefore the first and third divisions would remain at the same distance as before. It was impossible to carry out the evolution ordered as a rectangular movement. If the Defence had steadied her helm after inclining two points he imagined she would hardly have cleared the Valiant, but in such an event it would be necessary to work the speed and helm together to drop into station. Mr. Coleridge: Do you consider the performance of this evolution you have described manœuvring?—No, I consider it an evolution performed in ordinary circumstances of cruising. What distinction do you draw in ordinary circumstances between cruising and manœuvring?—The distinction is involved in the ships having been ordered to take up manœuvring distance, or remaining in the order of sailing. Then, as I understand you, the distance apart between the lines and the intricacy of evolution constitutes, in your opinion, the difference between manœuvring and ordinary cruising?—Certainly; but it also depends on the Admiral having warned the fleet that he is going to manœuvre. Then the distance between the lines, added to the warning that you were about to manœuvre, exhausts the difference, in your opinion, between manœuvring and ordinary cruising?—I do not understand the bearing of the word "exhausts," because there are many indications in a fleet of what the Admiral's intentions may be; but difference between ordinary cruising and exercising at manœuvres is such as I have said. In reply to further questions, Admiral Hoskins said there were rarely ships enough in a squadron to form three divivisions. It was unusual to change from three to two divisions in close order. It was a very fine, clear evening, except in the south-west, where a bank of clouds was gradually rising. He had performed this evolution once before during the cruise. On that occasion, the columns were six cables apart, and had been so for five hours. Assuming that the column of the third division was three-and-a-quarter cables from the column of the second division, the captain of the Defence would be justified in starboarding his helm as many points as he thought right, provided he did not endanger his ship. Capt. Arthur, of the Hector, who was leading one of the divisions when the order to change formation was given, described the movements of the Defence and Valiant as observed by him, and expressed his opinion that the management of the Defence caused the collision. Capt. G. L. Sullivan, of the Repulse, expressed a similar opinion. Lieut. Gubbins, who was the officer of the watch on board the Defence, said, when he saw that a collision was inevitable, he appealed to Capt. Pollard three times to go astern and alter the helm, but the captain took no notice of his suggestions. Finally, the witness himself, without receiving any orders, put the engine-room telegraph full speed astern. The Court then adjourned until Thursday.

On the Court resuming on Thursday, Navigating Lieut. R. G. Roe, of the Defence, was first examined, and said he was on deck on the evening of the collision, when the signal was made to form column of two divisions, line ahead. Capt. Pollard ordered the helm of the Defence to be put hard a-starboard, and directed the witness to inform him when the ship had gone off six points. The engines were eased to 25 revolutions. On the ship's head reaching six points, the witness notified the fact, and Capt. Pollard replied, "Keep the helm starboard yet; she won't do it." By something the captain said, or the sign he made, the witness saw that something was wrong. He ran to the port side, where the captain was. He believed he was in the cutter. Previous to this the captain gave the order to stop the ship. The Valiant was then about 60 yards off from the bow of the Defence. He said to Capt. Pollard, "You had better go full speed astern, sir, or we shall be into her." He got into the cutter, and the captain said, "Too late for that, Roe; hard a-port, full speed ahead. That is all we can do to prevent an end-on collision." The witness asked the quartermaster whether the helm was down all they could get it, and seeing that she was answering her helm very fast, called out "Flying to, sir." The captain at this time was hailing the Valiant, telling her to starboard. The captain next inquired, "Has the Valiant starboarded, or eased her engines yet?" The officer of the watch and the witness replied simultaneously "No, sir." Shortly after, seeing the foretopgallant-mast fall, the witness ran over to where the captain was, on the port side, asking him to go astern for fear of wreck. The captain replied, "Yes, certainly. It does not matter now. We have done all we could do. Thank God, I have not taken her end-on." He believed the engines were going full-speed ahead when the collision took place. In cross-examination by Mr. Coleridge, the witness said that the officer of the watch reported the Hector to be 3¼ cables off, whereupon Capt. Pollard replied, "That gives me ample room." Capt. Pollard was cool and collected. Lieut. Daubeny, officer of the watch of the Valiant, said when the orders for the evolutions were given he increased the speed gradually from 29 to 45 revolutions, full speed. Previous to starboarding his helm he did not observe any one on the Defence waving him to do so. When the Valiant was struck by the Defence she was three or four points off her course. To carry out the manœuvre ordered at the time it was not necessary for the Valiant to take any steps beyond keeping her regular station. In cross-examination witness said he starboarded when the Defence was 300 yards off. He thought there was danger about two minutes before the collision occurred. Capt. Knowles, of the Valiant, said he was below when the danger was reported. He went on deck, and considered that the action of Lieut. Daubeny in starboarding his helm and going full-speed ahead was judicious under the circumstances. Had he been officer of the watch or actually in charge at the time, he should have acted in a precisely similar manner. Had the helm of the Valiant been kept amidships, the result would probably have been that the Defence would struck the Valiant at a more dangerous, and probably a fatal, angle as regarded the safety of the ship. The engine-room artificers of the Defence and Valiant were then examined, and detailed the various orders which they received with regard to the movements of the engines, after which the Court was cleared, and, on being opened, the Judge-Advocate announced that the case for the prosecution was closed. Mr. Coleridge asked that certain witnesses who had been summoned by the prosecution, and whose evidence was material to the prisoner's case, might be examined, whereupon the president said that the Court did not desire their evidence, but if the learned counsel wished he could examine them. Lieut. Drury, of the Repulse, who was officer of the watch at the time of the collision, said that if the Valiant had starboarded her helm, the collision would have been avoided. As far as he could see, up to the last moment the Valiant did nothing to avert the collision. Frank White, signalman, of the Defence, said he saw Capt. Pollard motioning the Valiant to starboard her helm. The witness then took two semaphore flags, jumped into the port cutter, and endeavoured to signal the Valiant to starboard, but no one appeared to notice him. He thought that if the Valiant had starboarded her helm sooner, the collision would have been averted. The Defence signalled to the Valiant just before the collision, "I wish to pass ahead." The prisoner then appealed to be allowed until Saturday morning to prepare his defence.

The Court, however, decided that the defence must be ready by 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon, and accordingly adjourned until that time.

London Amusements.

The Italian Opera season closed last Saturday evening with Donizetti's "Linda di Chamouni." Madame Adelina Patti appeared as the heroine, and introduced into the finale of the opera the song of "Home, Sweet Home," charmingly rendered by the singer, but curiously inappropriate to the character. During the thirteen weeks of the season twenty of the most popular works in the operatic repertory have been performed, and one novelty, "Sigurd," produced.

At the Lyceum, "Twelfth Night" continues to draw good houses, notwithstanding the enforced absence of Miss Ellen Terry, still suffering from the inflammation affecting her right hand. Her sister, Miss Marion Terry, has represented Viola during the week.

The reappearance of Mr. Edward Terry at the Gaiety has been accompanied by a revival of Mr. Pinero's amusing farcical comedy of "The Rocket," in which Mr. Terry resumes his original part of the Chevalier Walkinshaw, portraying that scheming adventurer with admirable skill. The comedian is fairly supported by Miss Dolores Drummond, Miss Robina, and Mr. Robert Brough. The old farce of "High Life Below Stairs," with musical embellishments provided by Herr Meyer Lutz, has furnished an acceptable afterpiece. Mr. John Hollingshead has officially announced that "the eleventh French season, though less successful that some previous seasons, has fought bravely against a summer of extreme heat and fashionable languor, the receipts in seven weeks reaching nearly twelve thousand pounds, and the gross receipts of the theatre, from Jan. 1 to July 26, less than seven months, have been nearly eight and twenty thousand pounds, which is something to say in a very stagnant theatrical period."

To the Empire Theatre, in Leicester Square, has been transferred the Gaiety extravaganza company and Mr. Robert Reece's two-act farcical burlesque drama of "The Forty Thieves," preceded by the farce of "The Goose with the Golden Eggs." The lively programme was highly relished on Monday night by a very numerous audience, and the unflagging vivacity of Miss E. Farren, together with the efficient support rendered by Miss Broughton, and Messrs. Royce, Elton, Warde, and Dallas, received ample acknowledgments.

The additional attractions for Bank Holiday will be the "Twins" at the Olympic; "Black-Eyed Susan" at the Alhambra; and "Dollars and Sense" at Toole's Theatre. The Vaudeville will be reopened with "Confusion," while the Novelty Theatre closes on Monday evening next till the middle of September. The Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre will commence on Saturday next, Aug. 9.

Mr. Roberts has been engaged to play Capt. Crosstree in "Black-Eyed Susan," to be produced at the Alhambra Theatre this (Saturday) evening.

Capt. Markham, of the Vernon, who, in 1876, got nearer to the North Pole than any other Englishman has yet been, telegraphed to Lieut. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—HALE CONSTITUTIONS.—When the human frame has become debilitated from the effects of exposure, excesses, or neglect, then these Pills will work wonders. If they be taken according to the lucid directions wrapped round each box, Holloway's Pills exert the most exemplary tonic qualities in all those cases of nervous depression in which the vital powers have become so weakened that the circulation has been rendered languid and unsteady. They improve the appetite, strengthen the digestion, regulate the liver, and act as gentle aperients. The Pills are suited to all ages and all habits. A patient writes:—"Your Pills, to be valued, require only to be known. During many years I sought a remedy in vain, was daily becoming weaker, when your Pills soon restored me."

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179 of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily."

OUR readers will find below the Memorandum setting forth the new system of attack for a battalion of infantry. We are informed that the scheme is the joint work of Lord Wolseley and Major-General Newdigate. If this be so, we congratulate them on the success of their efforts to devise a system of Infantry attack suited to the conditions of modern warfare, and at the same time thoroughly English in character, and adapted to the peculiar organisation of the British Infantry:—

1. Small columns composed of two companies offer advantages both for manœuvring large bodies of troops, and for extending rapidly into formation for attack.

2. On the order "form columns for attack," each double company (1 and 2, 3 and 4, 5 and 6, 7 and 8), will form a quarter column in rear of its right half-company.

3. The senior officer of each double company will command the column.

4. On the caution to "form columns for attack," the men who have to move will turn to the right and disengage. On the word "quick" or "double march" they move into columns, halt, and front without further word of command. In forming these columns they will not form "fours."

5. Attacking columns will be formed from column in the same way. The distances will be corrected during formation. The columns thus formed will act as follows:—First half-company, skirmishers; second half-company, supports; third and fourth half-companies, main body.

6. The commander of the column will be responsible that the commander of the skirmishers knows the direction of the point to be attacked, and the flank by which his movements are to be regulated before commencing the advance. It will also be his duty to see that the supports and main body are at hand at the proper time and place.

7. One column will be named as the column of direction.

8. On the order to "Attack," the skirmishers will "advance" and "extend from the centre." The skirmishers of the columns on the right and left will "prolong the line."

9. An interval of at least six paces, in addition to the three paces between the files, should be kept between the skirmishers of the different columns.

10. The skirmishers of the column of direction will regulate the movements of the firing-line. The moment for making the different rushes, &c., will be taken up from them.

11. A distinct pause should be made after each rush, to enable the men to get their wind and fire steadily. Section volleys are strongly recommended.

12. The firing-line should not be reinforced until it has got as near the enemy as possible.

13. The supports must be brought up nearer and nearer to the skirmishers as they advance.

14. As soon as the firing-line has been reinforced by the supports, the main body should be brought up to about 80 paces in rear of it. It will be moved either in line, or in whatever formation is best suited to the circumstances of the moment. But it must be kept well in hand. The files can be opened out sufficiently to move with freedom, but rank entire is not recommended.

15. The charge will be carried out as follows:—The heaviest fire possible will be opened by the reinforced firing-line. The main bodies will advance, the drums and bugles playing the "charge" in quick time. As they approach nearer, the time will be quickened. On arriving within a few paces of the firing-line, and without halting, the order will be given by the Commanding officer, and repeated by all the officers, to "Charge." The drums and bugles will play in double-time, until the charge has been taken up all along the line. They will then cease playing. The firing-line will be called to attention by the whistle, and ordered to cease fire when the main body arrives within 15 paces of it. (On service, bayonets will be fixed, but not at manœuvres and brigade drills.) On the word "Charge!" they will double to the front with "Hurrahs!" On the halt sounding, which will be repeated by officers' whistles, the men will stand still where they are. The main body companies will be moved through them, and halted about 20 paces in their front. They will fire three volleys by sections on the retreating enemy. As soon as this volley-firing commences, the commander of each company in the old firing line will, without moving his men to the front or rear, give the word "Close" to his company, and reform it on the spot which is immediately in rear of the main body.

16. If a further advance is intended, these companies will form the main body, and the companies in front will each send forward half as skirmishers, half as supports. A retirement will be carried out in the same manner.

17. Except in the "Charge," when all the buglars should join in, no bugling will be allowed except that of the brigadier at brigade drill and the lieutenant-colonel at battalion drill.

The Memorandum is not so clearly or concisely expressed, and certainly needs to be supplemented by explanatory comments. Two leading principles seem to have been uppermost in the minds of those who have drawn up the scheme:—

1. The necessity which exists for maintaining throughout the attack a distinct and clearly defined chain of responsibility from the battalion commander down to the section leader.

2. The preservation of units intact from the moment the attack begins until the order is given to reform after the final charge.

A battalion of eight companies is given as an example. The double company is taken as the tactical unit throughout, and its individuality is never lost sight of. If we turn to the Memorandum, we shall find that when the battalion commander gives the order to "Form columns of attack," each double company forms itself into a quarter column of four half-companies in rear of the right half-company. We thus have four distinct columns of attack under four distinct leaders, working together as regards the final objective which it is the duty of the battalion commander to indicate but separate as regards their individual movements. As the Memorandum very truly points out,—Small columns are very handy for manœuvring in the field, and offer facilities for rapid adaptation to circumstances, which other formations are not capable of affording. Let us examine a little more closely the method followed. On the order being given to attack, the leading half-company in each column is extended as the firing line. The next half-company forms the support. The remaining two half-companies form the main body. Each double company is in this way entirely self-supporting. Exactly the same formations are adopted by the three other columns of attack in prolongation of the line. Great stress is laid—and we think justly laid—on the skirmishers and supports in each of the columns of attack belonging to the same company. Under the existing system of attack, as ordinarily practised, when the firing-line is reinforced by the supports, men from different companies get mixed together. Under the new system, which we have been describing, when the firing-line is finally reinforced for the charge the men will belong to the same companies, and confusion ought to be reduced to a minimum. This is a very important point, which is emphasised in the Memorandum, and which is, indeed, the fundamental principle upon which the new scheme is based. We must ask our readers to follow out the further details for themselves. Taken as a whole, the scheme is a very considerable advance upon anything which has yet been done in the English Army to decentralise command and responsibility in the field. Organisation is now to be substituted for drill. The battalion commander must give up the idea of directly commanding under his own hand, and with his own voice, the four columns of attack into which his battalion is divided. He must give clear orders to the double-company Commanders before committing them to the attack, and then leave them free to act as best they can, keeping such control over their movements as is possible when once he has set them in motion. We must leave this subject now, hoping to return to it another week, when we may venture to criticise more minutely the details of this new system of attack, which, if finally adopted, will effect an entire revolution in the tactics of English Infantry.

THE last of the Generals who commanded the British Army in the Crimea has passed from the scene. It was not the fortune of Sir W. Codrington to lead that Army in any great operation. He succeeded to the command after the failure of the British to hold the Redan gave a mortifying magnitude to the success of the French in the capture of the Malakhoff, and created such a feeling against Sir James Simpson that the Government were obliged to change horses in the middle of the stream. Simpson was recalled, and Codrington stepped into his place. The appointment was a surprise to those who did not know the strength of the influence exercised by the Court, and the relations which secured Sir W. Codrington a great position at Buckingham Palace and at Windsor. Sir Colin Campbell, though he became a peer and a Field-Marshal, never forgot the bitterness of his supersession, but he bore no ill-will to the man who was preferred to him. No one, indeed, thought of blaming Codrington, though his good fortune might be, and was, admired and envied. The fall of the Malakhoff led to the close of the war. The south side of Sebastopol was rendered untenable, and when the French took the great entrenchments round the old white tower over the harbour, the evacuation of the tremendous works which the Russians had defended with such extraordinary tenacity from September, 1854, to September, 1855, was rendered inevitable, and its execution immediate. The splendid retreat to the north side, over which, as recorded in the Times, the veteran Gortschakoff was wont to dwell with pride and pleasure till his dying day, was but a prelude to the negotiations which ended in the peace of 1856 and the Treaty of Paris, and although many plans of operations were discussed for the next campaign in the Allied Camps and the War Offices at home, during the winter of 1855, there were no movements made by the Allied Armies on the plateau before Sebastopol, and the peace found them glued, as it were, to their old camping-grounds. But it was resolved, as a matter of policy, to destroy the arsenal and docks of Sebastopol, and to the English fell the task of wrecking the noble establishments intended for the equipment of the Black Sea Fleet. The flowery despatch in which Sir W. Codrington described the great explosion at the White Buildings created amusement and excited a little ridicule; but the high-flown style of that production was not adopted in subsequent orders and letters, and the tenure of Codrington's command in the Crimea was marked by vigilance, intelligence, and discipline. Indeed, so vigorously did the Guards' General set to his work, that in the spring of 1856 the Army was in perfect order, and was superior in all respects to the French in all that was needed for a campaign. At a great review on February 24, 1856, General Codrington had the pleasure of conducting Pelissier down the lines of one of the largest armies ever commanded by an English General. There were forty-six battalions of Infantry on the ground, and there were some eight battalions otherwise engaged, so that it may be doubted if Wellington himself had more English troops pur sang under his orders—save, perhaps, at Vittoria, at any time—than Sir W. Codrington then could dispose of. But he was not destined to lead his battalions to battle. One day, soon after that parade, Windham, his Chief of the Staff, was riding up in his usual energetic exaltado state from Balaclava to the Head-quarters Camp, when he met a newspaper correspondent, whom he pulled up with the abrupt question, "Well! What do you think of the peace?" Mr. Pen answered, "I am sorry for it. After the fine show the troops made on February 24, I think it is a pity we do not rub some of the dirt of the Redan off our jackets." Chief of the Staff: "Yes. Of course! You want to write more letters, and have more of us killed." Mr. Pen: "I can gain nothing by your fighting. I want to get home to my wife and family. This is not my business; but as soldiers you ought to be glad of a chance of more honours and promotions in pursuit of your calling." Chief of Staff: "That's all very well, but just look over there" (pointing towards Mackenzie's Farm), "Mouravieff is on that plateau with 100,000 men. 'Coddy' is one of the best soldiers we have,—a purer-minded, braver, hard-working fellow never lived; but I believe if he marched us up there, Mouravieff would double us all up in a defile in half an hour." In other words, Windham did not think his General would have shone as a tactician or strategist in the conduct of operations, and was rejoiced that the war was over. The arrangements which Codrington made for the evacuation were very good, and to the close he spared neither time nor care towards the end in view. The description given by "the Hero of the Redan" of his chief, if not very elegant, was, in the main, just. A more upright, honourable man, a more gallant soldier than Codrington never lived or drew a sword. He had strong prejudices—and to these he added some peculiar "Guards'" notions. "But even his failings leaned to virtue's side." In the biography of the General in the leading journal yesterday, among the incidents of his career, the most characteristic is omitted. We believe there is no instance on record, save in Codrington's case, of a general officer in our service refusing a Field-Marshal's bâton. And that Sir W. Codrington did, and decidedly too, for the view he took of the honour was that it came too late, and was out of place. If he ever deserved to be Field-Marshal it was at the close of his military service in the field, for "living on," he thought, could give him no additional claim, though in truth it is often regarded as a crowning service. But Codrington was not unlucky. He embarked with the Guards on February 23, 1854, as a Colonel in the Army. He was promoted Major-General in June the same year, and he ought to have gone home. But he would not; he clung to the Army at Varna. The acting Quartermaster-General died. Airey, who had been in command of a brigade of the Light Division, was appointed to the post, and there were outcries in camp when it was announced that a lucky Guardsman had been selected to succeed him. But on the retirement of Sir George Brown, after his wound at Inkerman, from the command of the Light Division, the promotion of Codrington was hailed with satisfaction by all the Army, so well had he justified the choice of Lord Raglan as Brigadier. The Times makes an absurd mistake in the account of the attack of the Light Division on the Russians at the battle of the Alma, in speaking of epaulement for field guns which was carried for a time by Codrington's Brigade as a "walled redoubt," but it was quite formidable enough; and though the 7th, 23rd, and 33rd "drew the teeth" of the work, they were driven out of it, and with the exception of the 7th, compelled to retire. Mr. Kinglake gives the following picture of Codrington at the Alma:—

> "His father was that admiral whose achievement at Navarino had been a link in the chain of events which now brought the son in arms for the Sultan's cause. And any one who loved our navy, even to jealousy of the land service, might persuade himself that the bright, ardent, straightforward glance, and the bold, decisive speech of the Coldstream officer, must have come by inheritance from a sailor. He had the close, tight lips, bespeaking the obstinate man who lives a life undistracted by breadth and diversity of views. And much of what he seemed he was; a firm, plain soldier, not liable to be bent from the simple path by refined or complex views. He could not see far without the help of the glass which he kept attached to his cap, but he was more alive to the world around him than near-sighted men often are. He had never before been in action."

The General, however, used to deny the accuracy of some of the most telling touches of the historian; but he was not easy to please where men sought to make a hero of him. At Inkerman (where he was severely wounded) Mr. Russell thus describes his first appearance on the scene:—

> "It was a little after five o'clock on the morning of the 5th, when Brigdr.-Gen. Codrington, in accordance with his usual habit, visited the outlying pickets of his own brigade of the Light Division. It was reported to him that 'all was well,' and the General entered into some conversation with Capt. Pretyman, of the 33rd Regiment, who was on duty on the ground, in the course of which it was remarked that it would not be at all surprising if the Russians availed themselves of the gloom of the morning to make an attack upon our position, calculating on the effects of the rain in disarming our vigilance and spoiling our weapons. The Brigadier, who proved a most excellent, cool, and brave officer, turned his pony round at last, and retraced his steps through the brushwood towards his lines. He had only proceeded a few paces when a sharp rattle of musketry was heard down the hill and on the left of the pickets of the Light Division. It was here that the pickets of the Second Division were stationed. Gen. Codrington at once turned his horse's head in the direction of the firing, and in a few moments galloped back to turn out his division."

He endured all the trials of the winter which followed with constancy and courage, as soon as he had recovered from his wound, and no urgent private affairs could tempt him from his post; and so it was that when the assault of June 18 failed he was spoken of as "the next best chance but one" for General-in-Chief. It fell to his lot to arrange with Markham, under General Simpson's orders, for the next assault on the fatal Redan, and we need not now criticise the details of the plan; but no one can doubt that had Codrington been supported, or had he moved up the ready Royals and the troops in the first line of trenches, he would have held the Redan, and divided the glory of the capture of Sebastopol with our Allies. There ended his work, except that we have briefly described. In 1863 he was promoted to General, and he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar, which he held from 1859 to 1865. In 1860 he was named Colonel of the 23rd Regiment. In 1875 he became Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, the regiment in which he had held his first commission in 1821. He has died full of years and honours. The Brigadiers and Generals of the Crimea have all passed away now—if we except Lord Lucan. None have left, or will leave, a better record than William John Codrington.

THE recent Court-martial on the Captain of H.M.S. Defence is pregnant with instruction and warning, pointing very clearly to the want of interest in, and knowledge of, fleet manœuvring in the Navy, to which we have alluded previously. This is the important point, and we trust that it will not be obscured by the mere personal questions arising out of Captain Pollard's conduct. We cannot, however, pass over this part of the case without a few remarks. Captain Pollard has been tried by his peers, and we have no fault to find with the sentence of dismissal from his ship which the Court awarded. We may all sympathise with the individual whose professional career is marred by a simple error of judgment; but there is no room in the Navy for mistakes of this kind, which have been twice repeated in Captain Pollard's case, at the risk of valuable lives. In the recent case, it is clear that the distance between the columns of which the Fleet was composed rendered a rectangular movement by the Defence inadmissible; and if, as maintained in Captain Pollard's defence, a mistake as to the exact number of cables was made by the officer of the watch which led to the dangerous movement being attempted, it is scarcely necessary to point out that this is exactly one of those cases where the legal maxim, "qui facit per alium, facit per se," must be held to apply, or there is an end to a captain's responsibility. There is another point of great importance to which we feel bound again to call attention, viz., the almost reckless manner in which the ships of the First Reserve are yearly sent to sea to cruise together, with no subordinate officers, and with Lieutenants entirely without sea experience of the ships in which they are to act as officer of the watch. It is high time that the eyes of the Admiralty should be opened to this fertile source of danger, which we have certainly not exaggerated, when a simple reference to the Navy List shows that of the three Lieutenants who gave evidence at the Court-martial as officers of the watch of Defence, Valiant, and Repulse, one was appointed in April, the remaining two in May, this year, as "additional for the cruise." Let us look simply at the facts of the case. The Squadron was sailing in three divisions or columns in line ahead, the columns being only two cables apart. Now, as the Signal-book gives six cables as the proper distance between columns composed of three ships, it is evident that the mere fact of sailing in such close order was unusual, and, as we hold, dangerous. In the terrible loss of the Grosser Kurfürst through her being run down by the Kœnig Wilhelm in 1878, the two squadrons of which the German ships were composed were sailing at two cables from each other, and it was held at the time by our most experienced Naval tacticians that the fatal accident directly resulted from such a fundamental error. Admiral Hoskins issued a memorandum of instructions regarding the manner in which manœuvres were to be performed by the ships of the Squadron under his command. That memorandum laid it down clearly that no rectangular movement was to be attempted when forming columns of two from columns of three divisions. The ships of the centre division had only to slow down their speed and drop into their proper places in the new formation. The movement, thus explained, was simple in the extreme. We have alluded to the Grosser Kurfürst and we must now refer shortly to the Vanguard. The latter case is important, as having given rise to a famous Admiralty Minute, casting censure on the Admiral in command for not having formed two columns by an evolutionary signal involving a rectangular movement. It is because we have a suspicion that the very boldness and decision of these movements have little charm for some minds that we call special attention to this important point. It is indeed the gist of the whole question,—there is apparent risk, but real security, in the rectangular movements. "The Signal-book," the Admiralty, and "The Manual" say, in fact, "Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety;" and they have proved to be right. To sum-up, every change of formation should be conducted as an evolution, in accordance with the detailed instructions under each evolutionary signal in the "Signal-book," except, under very special circumstances, of which the Admiral in command must, of course, be the judge; and unless the Admiralty point this moral from the Defence Court-martial, we may expect the same errors to be repeated with an even more disastrous result.

THE apathy of the public mind on the subject of the state of the Navy can only be attributed to the many well-meant but frequently false alarms on this all-important point to Englishmen, which have often passed by like a summer's breeze scarcely ruffling the waters. The importance of the stake for which our Navy is champion is not denied, and if official assurances are placidly accepted, although contradicted by the voice not only of eleven out of twelve Naval officers on the Active List, but by a similar proportion of great "shipbuilders," "Colonial administrators," or "independent students of Naval warfare," as we are told by Mr. Arnold Forster in his recent admirable letter to the Times, it is that the cry of "wolf" has been so often raised previously, that though the people, as in the fable, all hear, they pay no attention. Some part of the blame for this exceeding obtuseness of our countrymen is also, no doubt, due to other causes, such as ignorance and the glamour which history, and still more fiction, has shed round our glorious Naval victories of the wars with Napoleon; and, in spite of their interest, we cannot but regret the Chauvinism which has led to the exaggerated tales related in the boys' books of Kingston, Ballantyne, and others, from which even well-educated English gentlemen too often obtain all their views of ocean fights and the easy discomfiture of our foes by the prowess of British sailors. After making, however, every deduction, we are disposed to place much to the account of the "scares" which have often been raised without adequate cause, and to the party—not necessarily political—use which has been occasionally made of the Navy as an engine of controversy. We propose, then, to allude to a few of the occasions on which there has been a real or attempted panic on the subject of our Naval strength in the last forty or fifty years; and we think that it will be found that when the cry has been raised by Naval officers, it has generally been well founded, while when it has emanated from civilians it has usually failed to rest on a solid basis. After the long war ending in 1815, we had no real Naval rivals for twenty-five years, and, except at Algiers and Navarino, our fleets in commission were at a minimum, the line-of-battle ships in commission having dwindled to one as flagship in the Mediterranean, and to the flagships in the home ports, which were then considered seaworthy vessels. In 1840 the difficulty with France with reference to Egypt caused our Fleet to be augmented hastily, when it was found that our ships were ill-manned, and that the French Fleet had again become really formidable. After the bombardment of Acre, attention was directed to our wants in an able work by Captain Plunkett, now Lord Dunsany, which was published in 1846. He showed the exertions which had been made by the Prince de Joinville to improve the French Fleet in many important respects, which were "well calculated to lessen the superiority which our numerous line-of-battle ships give us," and urged that we should have a more constant provision of seamen to man the ships which we possessed. In this work Captain Plunkett expressed the views of the Navy, and in 1853 Sir James Graham established the continuous-service system. From this time this real danger, which was universally felt and to which expression was given by numerous commissions on manning the Navy, became less real, and though it required at least a dozen years to bring the system into working order, so that our old difficulty was keenly felt at the commencement of the Crimean War, it has now become a thing of the past as far as our first line is concerned. After the Crimean War, considerable exertions were made to keep our Navy efficient, the pulse of the nation having become sensitive on this point; and though in the case of both steam line-of-battle ships and the introduction of ironclads we followed in the wake of the French, in both cases it was sufficient to point out the danger for it to be rectified. We hoped that Lord Northbrook would this year have emulated the action of Lord Palmerston, who, twenty years ago, came down to the House of Commons and promised to convert twelve line-of-battle ships into ironclads on our want being pointed out to him; but, as Lord Beaconsfield said, "much has occurred in the interval." In 1862, Captain Sherard Osborn and other Naval officers advocated the importance of the turret system, which was shortly afterwards more fully adopted with advantage, though the masted turret-ship proved to be a fatal error. So far, the panics were raised principally by Naval officers, and were fully justified; but we cannot say as much for an attempted cry raised in 1872. The letters in the Times of Sir E. J. Reed and others, printed in large type at this period, on "Our Ironclad Navy," sounded the note of alarm, which was undoubtedly felt by the writers. It was admitted that the French Navy was then at a low ebb, but attention was endeavoured to be directed to the ships of other foreign Powers, and especially to ships of certain "extra European Navies which were making themselves very powerful." The Russian turret-ship Peter the Great principally gave rise to this scare; but she was the only ship that Sir E. Reed mentioned by name, and though this able writer was more or less justified by his forecast of the future, he had but recently left office, and it was generally felt by Naval officers that no sufficient case was made out. A few years later, the same tactics were again employed relative to circular ships with reference to the Livadia and Russian ironclads, with even less result. These are the cases to which we more directly refer, as having injured the cause to which we have called attention entirely from a Naval point of view, and we would point out that, in the present instance, the weak state of our Navy has been urged most strongly by officers of the Navy unconnected with politics, and exclusively from a national point of view. The present agitation on this subject owes, then, its strength and its weakness entirely to its reality and to its unpolitical nature. In reply to our fears, we are asked to trust to political assurances from Lord Northbrook and Sir Thomas Brassey, who dub us alarmists, saying, in the words of our greatest poet,—"Well, you may fear too far;" but the next line, "Safer than trust too far," is the wise and obvious reply.

It is not often that an error can be found in the Royal Navy List, but we would draw the attention of the editors to p. 73, and to the heading "Lieutenant-Colonels and Commandants," an obvious mistake.

No change will be made at the Admiralty during the absence of Lord Northbrook in the capacity of High Commissioner to Egypt. The duties of First Lord of the Admiralty will be carried on by the Civilian Staff in Lord Northbrook's office at the Admiralty under the direction of Sir Astley Cooper Key. Lord Northbrook will leave England towards the end of the month, taking with him only his private secretary, Captain Beaumont, R.N. He will be met at Triest by the Iris, and proceed in her with Sir Evelyn Baring to Alexandria.

Rear-Admiral Hoskins struck his flag on board the Hercules, at Devonport, on Saturday, August 2, on the termination of the cruise of the Reserve Squadron, the ships dispersing to their respective stations.

The appointment of Captain Fullerton to the command of the Royal yacht is due to the fact of his having brought himself prominently to the notice of the Queen at the time of the collision between the Victoria and Albert and the yacht Mistletoe, in the Solent. Her Majesty presented a valuable ring to Captain Fullerton, when commander of the Royal yacht, for his coolness and gallantry on the occasion.

During the past week, Captain Wilson, of the Hecla, was sent by the Admiralty to inspect and report upon the magazine landing-carriages invented by Lieutenant-Colonel Alt for rifle calibre machine-guns.

Rear-Admiral John Kennedy Erskine Baird has been selected by the Admiralty to relieve Rear-Admiral Algernon McLennan Lyons in the command of the Pacific station, and will leave England in October to take over the duties of Commander-in-Chief. Admiral Baird has selected Captain the Hon. T. S. Brand to be his flag-captain on board the Swiftsure. The Triumph will be commissioned by Captain H. Rose in December to relieve the Swiftsure, and will remain as Flag Captain to Admiral Baird, Captain the Hon. T. S. Brand bringing home the Swiftsure. Captain Brand will at once proceed to Vancouver's Island to relieve Captain Aitchison.

The Admiralty having applied to the Treasury to have Major Tucker made supernumerary of his rank, as in the case of Majors Crosbie and Dowding, their Lordships have had their request refused.

Sir Frederick Evans has been relieved at the Admiralty by Captain Warton in the post of Hydrographer; and to mark their appreciation of the services rendered by Sir Frederick to navigation, the Admiralty have prevailed upon the Lords of the Treasury to sanction their granting to the late Hydrographer a special pension of, we believe, £450 a year, in addition to his retiring allowances.

In the House of Commons, during the small hours in the morning of July 29, the vote for half-pay, &c., of officers of the Royal Navy was brought on, and, to quote the words of the leading journal, was, after some discussion, passed. During the discussion the attention of the House was called to the so-called half-pay of Assistant-Paymasters, R.N., amounting to 2s. 6d. per diem, or £45 12s. 6d. per annum, applicable alike to officers of three or 16 years' seniority in that rank, when temporarily incapacitated from serving owing to illness contracted in the execution of their duties. The case of one of these officers was mentioned in the discussion, and we can only say that it is perfectly scandalous in this nineteenth century for an officer who lost his health owing to injuries contracted during service in time of war to be placed upon this inadequate sum for several months, in consequence of his being unfit for service from his own excessive zeal and hard work during warlike operations. Half-pay should in all cases bear some proportion to full-pay, and we hope that an alteration in these regulations will be effected by attention being thus publicly drawn to their incompetency and unfairness.

The flag of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay was shifted from the fore to the main on board the Helicon on July 11, at Alexandria. As soon as the Admiral's flag was broken at the main, it was saluted with 17 guns by the Inflexible, the salute being returned by the Invincible.

The Sultan has been going through some very realistic experiments, enveloping herself in dense smoke, to represent the condition of things at a real bombardment—but not quite. A few torpedo-boats armed with dummy torpedoes should have been at hand, and these should have attacked the Sultan under cover of her own smoke, to see which would have the greatest chances of success—ships bombarding or ports and torpedo-boats defending.

We regret to have to announce that Mr. Edward H. Whyte, Paymaster of H.M.S. Indus, died suddenly of apoplexy while walking in George Street, Plymouth, on Wednesday, the 6th inst.

The fortieth anniversary of the birthday of the Duke of Edinburgh was celebrated on August 6 at all Naval and Military stations. The Channel Fleet was at sea on that day, when the ships hoisted masthead flags and fired a Royal salute at noon. At Cowes the Canada, Hector, and Osborne, as well as all the craft belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron, as well as the yacht of his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway, joined in the celebration of this auspicious event.

Major Rose, of the Plymouth Division, who went out with the last reinforcements of Marines to Suakim, arrived in England in the P. and O. steamer Dacca on Tuesday last, invalided.

Lord Ravensworth's Committee on the building and repairing of war ships has sent in its report. As we feared would be the case, the Committee, composed nearly exclusively of private shipbuilders, with only one Naval officer, Captain Codrington, among its members, can, it is stated, see no advantage in building and armouring ships in the Royal dockyards. These should only be used for repairing purposes, and, according to this Committee, all new ships should be built in private yards, such as are owned by some of the gentlemen forming the Committee.

It is some months since we expressed a belief—indeed, something stronger—that Gordon, whom it was the passion and faith of the hour to represent as the "good man struggling 'gainst the storms of fate," plus the Mahdi and hundreds of thousands of fanatics, was in reality under cover of a heavy fire of tobacco and full of fighting prayerfulness, vexing the souls of the Soudanese, who were fighting for freedom and plunder in such sort that they could not call their lives their own; and the curtain having been lifted for us by the Mudir of Dongola, who certainly deserves credit, though he is not a Christian hero, for obeying orders and defending his trust, we see Gordon rampaging along both banks of the Nile, taking food and stores, and scattering the patriots like chaff before the wind. In this connection, note the good work of Major Kitchener, who, with the Mudir of Dongola—erewhile represented as an artful, reprobate traitor—is setting out to Debbeh, and may join hands with Gordon before Lord Northbrook reaches Cairo. The expedition of Wortley and Colville shows how the hosts in the Desert are mere mirage.

The report that Sir Thomas Brassey's name is to be added to the muster-roll of those who are to be moved into the Upper House ought to be true, if Sir T. Brassey desires to be a Peer. It would be a "guarantee of stability" in some sort. Surely, under all the conditions, there could not be a better selection for such a mark of the Queen's favour, apart from political considerations, than that of a man who represents a great fortune acquired in the development of great enterprises, and who has used the wealth he inherited worthily and wisely, and in his own career.

Things are not always better managed in France For example, a French military paper relates how,—"We saw on Friday a regiment marching along the Rue de Rivoli, the men of which were overwhelmed by the intensity of the heat. On making inquiries, we found, to our great astonishment, that this regiment had been marched from the Faubourg St. Antoine to pay funeral honours to a Naval Captain, who died in the Rue Delaborde, adjoining the Pepinière Barracks, where two regiments of infantry are stationed." The result of marching the 103rd across Paris in this tropical weather was that one officer and seven men were struck down by the sun. Had such a piece of mismanagement occurred in England, we should have heard something of the matter in Parliament, and the noble lord would have been asked by the honourable Member to explain.

In a "paunflette" entitled "Our New Armament," Mr. Longridge, M.I.C.E., bombards poor Lord Hartington, the War Office, Colonel Maitland, Woolwich, the Ordnance Committee, &c., from his "wire guns." Though he differs from Sir Joseph Whitworth (and, of course, from every other gun-maker), he agrees with Sir Joseph and with all who think Woolwich wrong; but as Colonel Hope has announced his intention of shutting Woolwich up, and taking over all the gun manufacture to himself, perhaps Mr. Longridge will address his next wire cartridge to Colonel Hope, and not to the Secretary of State for War.

It is high time that the Divisional Standing Orders of Aldershot Camp were revised and reprinted. To purchase a copy for guidance as to the manners and customs of the Camp is to be led miserably astray, so much has been added, amended, and deleted since the publication of the last edition in 1879. The changes in these Standing Orders are merely called attention to from time to time through the medium of the daily Divisional Orders, and are often speedily forgotten. A new regiment arriving at Aldershot finds much difficulty in understanding matters which are so complicated that even experts in the brigade and divisional offices are often in a state of blank ignorance concerning them.

In a work just published in Paris, "The Chinese Painted by Themselves," the author, Colonel Tcheng-Ki-Tong, Military Attaché, makes a few observations on the arsenal of Fou-Tcheou, which, he says, is not an arsenal in the strict sense of the term, for neither powder nor guns are manufactured there. The Colonel says that China is indebted for this arsenal to the skill and energy of M. Prosper Giquel, and he brings his remarks to a close by quoting a report addressed by that gentleman to the Society of Civil Engineers of Paris on the subject of Fou-Tcheou. M. Giquel wrote,—"Our country will be able to derive some advantages from this creation; the direction of the works being entirely French, the Chinese chiefs are in a position to appreciate our methods of works and our manner of fabricating. The workshops have been organised with machinery arriving from France, and the arsenal is in constant communication with our commercial houses. The industrial instruction given to our pupils and apprentices being equally French, these young men naturally look towards France when they wish to enlarge the circle of their knowledge." The Colonel adds that "these words which breathe an elevated patriotism exempt from sterile ambition, can be quoted without regret by a Chinaman. Who amongst us will not clap his hands on hearing this noble language? . . . . Institutions like that of Fou-Tcheou are great, because they create civilising rivalry, and prepare the triumph of generous ideas which render nations united."

Since last week the temperature has risen all over India, and the failure of the rains is beginning to be felt. Public health, however, continues to improve, which is very satisfactory at this time of the year. Government seems at last to be awakening to the value of hill stations and the advisability of sending as many men as possible to the hills during the hot weather. Cherat, the hill station of the Peshawur district, for instance, is being well developed year by year, and now contains the head-quarters of the 1st South Lancashire, the 2nd Dorset, and a strong detachment of the Duke of Wellington's from Nowshera; and a mule road is now being constructed to the Khwarra Valley. Up to the present time, the accommodation is very limited, both for officers and men; but the former are beginning to build for themselves, and it is said that proper housing will soon be provided for the latter. One or two other sites have been "prospected" lately, with a view to the possibility of forming new cantonments, but so far nothing has been settled. The truth is, that so many branch lines have been constructed lately, or are being discussed, that before very long the whole line of the Hills will be joined to the Indian railway system. Darjeeling has long had its railway. Pathaukot, about forty-five miles from Dalhousie, is now the terminus of a line meant to serve Bukloh and Dharmsala as well. A light railway to Murree is projected. Rainbagh, which is only about fifteen miles from Naini Tal by bridle path, will, in the course of a few weeks, be connected by rail with Bareilly; and Simla itself, with its nest of military stations, is the subject of almost daily discussion and reports by a railway committee. With these lines so close at hand, nearly all the hill stations will be within a forced march of the plains; and, in cases of emergency, the troops could be got down as soon as they would be required. This certainly does away with the old objection to some of the hill stations—viz., that it would take less time to get troops out from England. At the same time, there is no doubt that hill soldiering is not popular with officers or men, the latter in particular disliking the confinement. From various considerations, the men have often to be kept carefully in cantonment limits, and they find this very irksome. The authorities have now decided to employ military labour where possible on public works. This is a step in the right direction. At present the Royal Irish Fusiliers have a contingent of 200 men employed on the new Kashmir cart-road at Topa, near Murree. It is a pity they could not find employment for more of them. They are beginning now to talk about the escort for the Boundary Commission, which has, of course, not yet been decided on. It is not likely former precedents will be departed from. While speaking of re-raising Native regiments last week, I forgot to mention the Bombay Cavalry, who seem to have been included in the reductions simply because they were reducing all round, and not because they were superfluous. The remaining regiments are beginning, it appears, to complain of the heavy work, and it is just possible that the disbanded regiment may be re-established. Sir O. Tanner, who has been commanding at Quettah for some time past, has been finally gazetted to the Brigade, vice Brigadier-General Stanley Edwardes, C.B., who has been transferred to Bombay. The Bombay Sappers and Miners, who were sent to Quettah on account of the party falling into a bad state of health, have now been detained there beyond the original term, as their rate of improvement has not been considered satisfactory. Captain Routh, the Suffolk Regiment, lately Station Staff Officer at Murree, has been appointed Brigade-Major at Rawul Pindee, vice Major H. R. Young, of the Dorsetshire Regiment (39th), whose term expired in May. The recommendations of the Native Cavalry Dress Committee, which sat under the presidency of Colonel A. R. D. Mackenzie, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, about a year ago, have been circulated among the Commandants of Native regiments to enable them to record their opinions. For some time past, there have been complaints of the variety of colours used for the tunic, which throws a very heavy expense on officers transferred or promoted from one regiment to another, and it is by no means a bad thing that something like uniformity should be aimed at. The English Commissariat are not alone in their troubles. A circular has lately been published to the effect that a large quantity of Tarragona wine purchased for the hospital was found on analysis by the chemical examiner to be quite innocent of grape juice, and has been ordered to be sold and replaced by something of a better quality.

THE RESERVE SQUADRON.

Under, or as the Americans more properly write "over," the signature of "An Eye-Witness," a correspondent writes to the Western Morning News, apparently to vindicate Admiral Hoskins from the comments of an unfavourable character made upon his conduct when in command of the Reserve Squadron by the correspondent of that journal. He says:—

> "In common with many of your readers, I have read with interest, not unmingled with disgust, the numerous letters which have appeared from time to time in your columns reflecting upon the movements of the Reserve Squadron, and upon the Admiral in particular. In fairness to that officer and to those under his command, I trust you will give publicity to a few facts on the other side, from an impartial judge."

Disclaiming any intention of entering upon an argument with the special, "who may be for all I know a yeoman of the signals in one of the ships," "An Eye-Witness" "after compliments," as they say in the East, to the general and special merits of our contemporary, in which we are glad to express our concurrence, observes:—

> "The general tendency of the remarks bearing on the recent court-martial on the captain of the Defence is to endeavour to show that the collision with the Valiant was due not so much to the proceedings of the captain, as to the formation of the Fleet as ordered by the Admiral, the public are led to believe that the fact of ships cruising in columns only two cables apart is a source of danger, whereas the contrary is the case; there is actually no possible danger in such a formation, indeed, there would be none if the columns were only one cable apart, and the proof of it lies in the fact that in thick weather, especially in fogs, the closer ships are to each other the safer they are, and the danger consists in losing touch of each other. Of course, before any manœuvres, such as steam tactics, are ordered, the columns should be spread to the authorised distance, viz., double the number of cables that there are ships in the longest column, and such was invariably the case with the Reserve Squadron, but for ordinary cruising by day two cables is the proper distance, and the ships in close order. Double this distance at night. On the recent occasion no intricate manœuvre was ordered, the three columns had only to be made into two, which is or should be effected by the ships forming the middle column dropping easily into their position in the first and third, an evolution that any midshipman could have performed with ease; but because the captain of the Defence chose to adopt tactics quite unprecedented, the Admiral is pronounced to blame. Now, sir, I have no hesitation in stating my firm belief that every officer and man who has had the honour of serving under Sir A. H. Hoskins has beheld with admiration the masterly manner in which that officer has handled his squadron,—witness the anchoring of the fleet in a dense fog off Kirkwall, with a five-knot tide running, the ships anchored simultaneously by fog signal in 25 fathoms of water; and when the fog lifted, 36 hours after, every ship was in her position."

It may be doubted whether it is universally true that "the closer ships are to each other in thick weather, the safer they are," for the weather and the sea may materially affect the application of the maxim, and the question of speed has also to be considered, but we may accept the conclusion of the writer without reserve:—

> "The fact is, our officers have not sufficient experience in handling large ships in close proximity to one another, and it would be better for the service if they had more opportunities of so doing; depend on it, the Admiral who has accustomed his captains to manœuvre their ships at close quarters, will have an immense advantage over his adversary in time of war, and it will be a bad day for the Navy of England if officers are fearful of so doing by the pressure of public opinion, or the malevolent outpouring of the Press."

Reviews.

The Great Republic. By Sir Lepel Henry Griffin, K.C.S.I.
(Chapman and Hall.)

A considerable portion of this little volume must have become familiar to the readers of the Fortnightly Review, in the pages of which journal it has appeared from time to time. The author, we are told, has learned from his own experience that his criticisms on various American characteristics have not only attracted much attention in the United States, but have met with hostile comments in the shape of verses and newspaper articles. Hence he hastens to assure Americans that his present work is written in no unfriendly spirit to them, and at the same time to express his regret that the contrary should have been supposed to be the case. The real object of the book is to point out to English readers, and more especially to English Liberals, how they should carefully avoid certain of the political methods of America which the author considers to be thoroughly bad and corrupt. In the first chapter, which considers the question of "International Criticism," the author describes America as the country of disillusion and disappointment, in politics, literature, culture, art, in its scenery, its cities, and its people. He further adds that, after having had some experience of every country in the civilised world, he can think of none, except Russia, in which he would not prefer to reside, and in which life would not be more worth living, as well as less sordid, mean, and unlively. Having delivered those strong expressions as to America, Sir Lepel Griffin hastens to qualify any harshness in them which may appear to be exaggerated and unfriendly by reference to the subject of "International Criticism." In reference to it, he observes that there appears to exist an idea that the friendliness, and indeed the amalgamation, social and political, of the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race are so to be desired, that all mutual criticism of politics or manners should be uniformly favourable, even though the praise be undeserved. From this point of view the question may arise whether, if we are unable to say anything pleasant of America, it may not be better to remain altogether silent. In the author's opinion, silence is both harmful and useless. America is full of attractive power. It is also energetic and aggressive. English politicians are looking to her for the dawn of a new social and political millennium, while each year the Democratic tide rises higher, and our institutions are becoming more Americanised, "while some English statesmen are admittedly careless how high the tide may rise, and what existing institutions it may sweep away." In the second chapter of his book, the author observes upon "The Big Things of America," and draws a rather amusing picture of this "English characteristic," so "strongly developed, and even grotesquely caricatured in America." At present, we are told that Americans are satisfied with things because they are large, and, if not large, must at all events have cost a deal of money. The huge pork-packing establishment in Chicago is considered by Americans in general as the thing best worth seeing in the United States. The further chapters of Sir Lepel Griffin's book treat the following subjects with what some critics would call "strong descriptive language":—"Scenery and Cities," "Liberty—Equality," "Sweetness and Light," "The Harvest of Democracy," "The Foreign Element," "Justice," and "The Cost of Democracy and Foreign Policy." There is a good deal of readable matter in this book, but its style and language do not present any temptations to adopt the views which the author so strongly advocates. It is quite right that he should disclaim any wish or intention on his part to offend Americans; but, at the same time, it is impossible to fail in detecting a bias on the part of the author sufficiently strong to render it difficult, indeed, for him to secure the confidence and approval of his readers.

We have received from "La Librairie, C. Muquardt, 45 Rue de la Régence," Brussels, a packet of very useful and remarkable "brochures militaires," which seem to us on a cursory glance to contain a deal of interesting and useful matter. There is a fascicule on "The Destruction and Reconstruction of Railways in Time of War," by Major Marsigny (Artillery), another on "Siege Trains," by Sub-Lieutenant Micheels, one on "Sieges," by Captain Witry, one on "The Sanitation of Barracks," by Lieutenant-Colonel Van den Bogaert (Engineers), one on "The Italian Field Artillery compared with that of the Great Powers," another on "The Tactics of Julius Cæsar," by Colonel Henrard, one on "Military Balloons and Carrier-pigeons," by Lieutenant Keneker, of the Staff, &c., and each well printed on good paper, 8vo, at one franc each. As the demand cannot be large, only a small number of copies of each work is printed. Of the most interesting and useful of these papers, we shall take further note hereafter.

Army and Navy Magazine.—Col. Hildyard has been represented, in one of the reviews of his paper in the Army and Navy Magazine on the alternative routes for the relief of Khartoum, to be in favour of the road from Suakim to Berber. As we read his paper, there is no such preference expressed; on the contrary, Col. Hildyard says, after enumerating some of the disadvantages of that road, if other things were equal, there would be no doubt of the choice being on the side of the Nile. That has been our contention all along. We have held that Gordon was in no great straits, and that being so, the Nile route should be taken by any relieving force for Khartoum. Now, it will be found that no relief is needed at all most probably, and that Gordon farà da se. "The Night Watch" is deplorable doggerel :—

> "The men all mustered. Call the watch, he bawls ;
> And 'all the watch' the bos'un's mate loud drawls."

That is a fair specimen of the maunder which the editor has printed under this head ; but the rest of the matter is more worthy of paper and type.

The contents of the August number of the Nineteenth Century are interesting and varied. Mr. Knowles is an ingenious editor, and subjects the best intelligences to interviewing in the service of his magazine, as Mr. Gladstone told the House of Commons. The article which is most in our way is an account by Mr. A. Forbes of the United States report by Com. Goodrich on the Naval and Military operations in Egypt, to which we directed attention in several lengthened notices some weeks ago ; but as the writer was a sailor who beheld the Naval operations and their results, we considered that his report had greater value as an outsider's view of the bombardment than it possessed as a criticism on the military operations at which Com. Goodrich was not present. Nevertheless, the estimate of the American officer's work formed by Mr. Forbes is one in which we concur, and it is agreeable to read the encomiums bestowed on the Army, and the conduct of the military operations which led to the establishment of the British forces in occupation of Egypt at this day.

THE SOLDIERS' HELMET.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I take the liberty of writing to you respecting the colour of the helmet of the British soldier as used in this country and Natal, &c. It seems strange to me, after the many able officers, both military and medical, that they supply so many of our soldiers with a white helmet instead of a straw-coloured one, which is more the colour of the stone and grass of this country. More men are likely to get killed in action through wearing the white helmet than by sunstroke, owing to the colour of the other. With a good ventilator, it could be made quite proof against sunstroke. A soldier who gets sunstroke through simply wearing a brown helmet is not fit for the service. I have no doubt that you will bring this to the notice of those interested in the British soldier. I have been in two Kaffir wars, also in the Transvaal War, and am a farmer here, so that I may safely say something about the colour of the helmet. It would be money saved, and gladly adopted by the soldier, as it would save all the burnishing of the other.

The Summer Sessions at the Army Medical School, Netley Hospital, closed on Tuesday, when the prizes were distributed by Gen. Sir G. Willis, commanding the Southern District. The surgeons on probation in the Medical Department of the British Army who were successful at both the London and Netley examinations were J. R. Barefoot, 2,440; R. H. Clement, 2,420; G. D. Hunter, 2,335 ; W. C. Beevor, 2,300 ; L. E. Anderson, 2,275 ; G. B. Russell, 2,250 ; A. E. C. Spence, 2,220 ; J. R. Mallins, 2,200 ; R. G. M'Cormack, 2,180 ; H. N. Thompson, 2,168 ; J. I. P. Doyle, 2,145 ; N. Manders, 2,120 ; L. R. Colledge, 2,110 ; T. F. Freyer, 2,075 ; C, Birt, 2,070 ; R. S. F. Henderson, 2,020 ; H. Mitchell, 2,000 ; S. Butterworth, 1,990 ; C. J. Holmes, 1,930 ; J. R. Lane, 1,920. Birt gained the Parkes Memorial Bronze Medal ; Russell the Montefiore second prize. The surgeons on probation in her Majesty's Indian Medical Service who were successful at the London and Netley examinations are :—J. H. T. Walsh, 5,517 ; H. Hendley, 4,879 ; H. E. Banatvala, 4,606 ; G. H. Fink, 4,423 ; W. G. P. Alpin, 4,146. Walsh gained the Herbert prize of £20, with the Montefiore Medal, and prize of 20 guineas and the Martin Memorial Gold Medal. Hendley gained the Director-General's prize in Pathology.

All officers who on completion of 20 years' service while in the grade of squadron or wing-officer have failed to qualify for promotion by passing the examination laid down in Army Regulations, will in future be removed from regimental employ and placed on general duty. The order comes into effect on Nov. 1, 1885, and will not apply to an official who may complete 20 years' service before that date. G.O. 199 of 1884 is cancelled.

The Liverpool Courier says :—"The new Cavalry barracks at Seaforth are approaching completion, though from a cursory inspection we hardly expect they can be, as stated, intended for occupation this month. It may be suggested that instead of devoting them to cavalry only, they should be used for horse or field artillery. There is not a battery of this branch nearer than Sheffield, while Liverpool—or rather Seaforth—is a far more suitable station in that there is a range for practice in the immediate neighbourhood. Batteries of artillery in inland towns have to be marched a considerable distance from their quarters—often 50 miles or so—for practice, and the time available is often insufficient for the purpose. We do not know whether the authorities think it worth while to consider the instruction of the local infantry volunteers in working with field guns, but it is worth while to remember that no guns have taken part in any local field day for 13 years. If the Seaforth barracks, which are apparently intended for about a squadron of cavalry, were to be occupied by a troop of cavalry and a battery of field artillery, it would, we submit, be an advantage in every way."

The Special Committee, under Col. Hawker, appointed by the Government of Madras to report upon the Commissariat establishment necessary to undertake the shipment of stores for a field force, are Major Atkinson, Qrmr. Hogan, South Wales Borderers, and Mr. Bartlett. The report is awaited with much interest.

MACHINE GUN EXPERIMENTS IN THE FORTH.

The Committee appointed by the War Office to experiment with machine-guns of various calibres against the old Inchkeith Fort, in the Firth of Forth, joined H.M.S. Sultan on Aug. 6. The Committee consists of Sir Andrew Clarke, C.B., Inspector-General of Fortifications ; Col. Grant, commanding Royal Engineers in North Britain ; Col. Shore, R.E., Major Barker, R.E., Capt. Clarke, R.E., and Staff. To witness the experiments on behalf of the Artillery, with regard to the guns on the forts, there were present Gen. Reilly, Inspector-Gen. of Artillery and Stores, from the War Office ; Major O'Callaghan, R.A., and Major Graves, R.A., from the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, and Staff. There were also present Capt. Jackson, of the Royal Navy ; Col. Keate, commanding Royal Artillery in North Britain ; and Capt. Preston, Adjutant, and Staff. The guns experimented with were the Nordenfelt and Hotchkiss 6-pounder quick-firing shell-guns, the Nordenfelt four-barrel 1-in. anti-torpedo-boat gun, and five-barrel rifle-calibre gun, and the Gardner five-barrel rifle-calibre (45-in.) gun. Capt. Tracey, of the Sultan, conducted the experiments. In order to judge of the effect of the fire from these various guns on men working the guns in the batteries, a number of wooden figures were placed in the positions that artillerymen would occupy during an engagement. After each round of firing, these dummies, as well as the fortifications, were examined by officers of the Sultan, who went ashore for the purpose. The Times' correspondent gives the following account of the experiments made on Thursday, Aug. 7 :—"Practice commenced about noon with the machine-guns, at a range of 1,000 yards. Volleys were then fired in succession from all the Nordenfelt guns that could be brought to bear,—the rifle-calibre guns on deck, the rifle-calibre guns on the tops or platforms on the masts, and the Hotchkiss five-barrelled gun. This was followed by 50 rounds from the 6-pounder guns, at a range of 1,500 yards. While this practice was going on, the ship fired with blank powder the heavy broadside guns at half-minute intervals, so as to envelop her in smoke, as would be the case in action. So completely was this effected in the course of the second series, that the great ship was for several minutes entirely concealed from view, not a spar or a rope being visible. The rattle of the machine-guns as they rained their shower of bullets on the batteries and the periodic booming of the broadsides produced a terrific effect. Next came the practice from the 10-inch guns with shrapnell shell or battering charges. This consisted of five rounds of battering charges, followed by five of full charges, at each of three ranges—3,500, 2,500, and 1,500 yards. The vessel was under way during the whole of the practice. The result of the day's work has been very satisfactory to the engineers, inasmuch as the fortifications have shown their power to resist such an attack as they could seldom be subjected to in real warfare. The emplacement is practically undamaged. The gun on the battery assailed, the north-east battery, was struck twice and the carriage once, and this practice was made, I understand, with the new 6-pounder Nordenfelt. Two of the three dummies exposed on the battery were put hors de combat."

Our correspondent at Leith telegraphs that :—"The decision of the Committee, after examining the result of each series, is that, in their opinion, two minutes is not a sufficiently long period to give a fair estimate of the capabilities of the machine-guns employed. In addition to which they regret that no small-bore Nordenfelt machine-guns were supplied, Gatlings being used instead. The Hotchkiss 5-barrel gun jambed, owing to the base or head of one of the cartridges being torn off in extracting, thus leaving the case in the barrel, into which the head of the next shell coming to that barrel was thrust, but did not enter the chamber, thus stopping the firing of this gun. The most effective fire was that of the Nordenfelt 6-pounder, which hit the gun and carriage in the fort several times, also disabling the dummies. The gun in the fort was not put out of action itself, although the men manning it were shown to have been disabled from working it. Still the Nordenfelt 6-pounder did more than the heavy guns of the Sultan toward silencing the fire of the fort.* Three more series of experiments remain to be carried out, but, owing to a dense fog, nothing was done this day (Friday). The Committee have decided that the Sultan shall use full charges instead of battering on Saturday, and that all machine-gun series shall be repeated, allowing five minutes for each series. Also, that all machine-guns that can be brought to bear shall be fired simultaneously, and that common shell from the heavy guns shall be fired as well as shrapnel."

* This remark must be taken with reserves as to the conditions of the fire, distance, &c. Machine-guns cannot dismount cannon or injure parapets.

The work of removing the equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington from Hyde Park Corner to Aldershot was commenced on Wednesday. The head and tail of the horse were first removed upon a railway trolley drawn by three horses, and shortly afterwards, the body which had been placed upon a massively built truck, with large gun-carriage wheels, was brought out of the enclosure, drawn by four powerful horses. The body weighed between seven and nine tons, and brakes of great power had to be applied to the wheels as the conveyance went down the incline by Constitution Hill.

The Standard says :—"Bishop Piers Calveley Claughton, Chaplain-General to the Forces, is lying so dangerously ill at his residence, Northwick Terrace, Maida Hill, that no hopes are entertained of his recovery. The Bishop, it is supposed, has a cancer on the kidneys, but he suffers no pain whatever, and remains perfectly conscious. His family have taken a farewell, as have also most of his clerical brethren, and for some days past the prayers of the Church have been asked for him in St. Paul's Cathedral."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

William Mather, a Waterloo veteran, has died at Pye Bridge, near Alfreton. The deceased served in the Royal Horse Artillery, and passed through the campaign without injury. He was 88 years of age in March last.

Orders have been received for the 1-1 London Division, Royal Artillery, stationed at Portsmouth, to embark Sept. 19 in Crocodile for India. Strong drafts for the batteries of the 3rd Brigade are being prepared at the depôt at Hilsea, and will proceed in the same vessel.

Lieut.-Col. D. W. Lawrell, on the Retired List, died at 34 Campden Hill Gardens, on the 3rd inst., after a few days' illness.

COLDSTREAM GUARDS. Gen. Sir W. J. Codrington, colonel of the regiment, died at his country residence, Danmore Cottage, Heckfield, near Winchfield, Hampshire, on Wednesday, in his eightieth year. The deceased was the eldest surviving son of Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, who took the leading part in the battle of Navarino, in Nov., 1804. He was educated at Harrow and at the Royal Military College, entering the Army in Feb., 1821, and receiving his commission as lieut. in April, 1823, becoming a lieut. and capt. in July, 1826, and capt. and lieut.-col. July, 1836, a col. in Nov., 1846, and major-gen. in June, 1856. He went with the Coldstream Guards to Bulgaria in 1854, and while at Varna, before the Expedition departed for the Crimea, was there appointed by Lord Raglan, the British Commander-in-Chief, to the command of the First Brigade of the Light Division. He led his troops with great steadiness at the battle of the Alma, although he had not before seen actual warfare. At Inkerman his bravery was conspicuous, and when, in consequence of a wound, Sir G. Brown had to leave the Crimea, Major-Gen. Codrington was appointed to the command of the Light Division. On the subsequent retirement of Sir G. Brown he succeeded to this command, and led the unsuccessful attack on the Redan at Sebastopol, on Sept. 8, 1855. On the resignation of Gen. Simpson, who had succeeded Lord Raglan in the command, he was appointed Com.-in-Chief of the British Army in the Crimea in Nov. 1855. He was thus present with the army from its arrival in the Crimea to the evacuation in July, 1856. For his services he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath, Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Grand Cross of the Military Order of Savoy, and received the medal with clasps, the First Class of the Medjidie, and the Turkish medal, and also received the Médaille Militaire of France, as having commanded an army in alliance with France. In July, 1863, Gen. Codrington was advanced to the rank of general, and in 1865 was created a K.C.B. He represented Greenwich from 1857 to 1859, when he was appointed to the command at Gibraltar. The colonelcy of the 54th Foot was bestowed upon him in 1858, that of the 23rd Fusiliers in Dec., 1860, and in March, 1875, he was transferred to the colonelcy of the Coldstream Guards. In October, 1877, he was placed on the Retired List. He was for some years a member of the Metropolitan Board of Works. At the General Election of 1874 he unsuccessfully contested Westminster, and at that of 1880, the Borough of Lewes. The deceased married in 1836, Mary, a daughter of Mr. Levi Ames, of the Hyde, Hertford, who was appointed a Bedchamber Woman to her Majesty in 1856.

14TH WEST YORKSHIRE REGIMENT. Our Journal says, "The latest edition of the Monthly Army List received in our mess proves that the startling changes of the last few years have at last turned even the heads of the compositors of this book. Rifles, Regulars, Volunteers, and Militia Regiments seem to be all jumbled up in one glorious confusion. The 11th are followed by the Rifles, and these in turn by seven or eight Volunteer Regiments who have taken the place usually occupied by us. After these come the 28th Gloucestershire Regt., and the 'Old and Bold' are nowhere to be found."

21ST ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS. Major Stevenson will revert to regimental duty from the 15th inst., on completion of his term of appointment as Adjt. of the 3rd Batn.

26TH CAMERONIANS (SCOTTISH RIFLES) proceed from Aldershot to Portsmouth on Thursday next to embark in the Orontes, en route to Glasgow.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major S. Vere Alston has been ordered to rejoin headquarters at Gosport from the recruiting service at Edinburgh, and has been relieved this day by Major W. F. Campbell, from the Plymouth Division.

An exchange of divisions has been sanctioned between Capt. G. Skipworth, of the Chatham, and Capt. F. J. P. Evans, of the Plymouth Division, the removals to be effected without cost to the public.

51ST KING'S OWN LIGHT INFANTRY. The Bugle says:—"The departure of Lieut.-Col. Chatfield to the 2nd Batn. will doubtless be a source of regret to all in the regiment. He had been with us for 18 years, and was very sorry to leave the regiment, even though it was only to go to its 2nd Batn. At mess, the night before his departure, when dining with the colonel and officers of the regiment, he expressed his regret at leaving, and his interest in the battalion in a very eloquent speech, and trusted that at some later date he might return to us as commanding officer, which fact Col. Ball-Acton had hinted at in proposing Lieut.-Col. Chatfield's health. We sincerely hope that it may be so. Col. Chatfield left for Bombay on Saturday, the 14th. We hope he may have a safe voyage and a pleasant one."

59TH EAST LANCASHIRE REGIMENT. The 5 and 9 Lilywhites' Gazette says:—"The great event of the month just past was the unveiling of the regimental memorial at Nottingham Castle. Elsewhere we give a condensed report of the speeches made before and after the event. And what are the key-notes? On the one side, 'Speed the parting guest;' on the other, 'Old Lang Syne.' We can make neither less of it nor more. Nottingham finds herself without a regiment, merged in the next county, reduced to the level of Rutland, and we, though not nameless, are strangers in a strange land; off with our old love, and yet not on with the new. We may play 'The Lancashire Lass,' as we do, on every parade; we may wear her red rose, and we may get an average of eight to ten recruits a month from modern Burnley; and in spite of all this, may feel we should do far better all round in the old home in historical Nottingham. There, four miles out of the town, the site purchased by the War Office still waits its barrack; and, if report speaks true, that barrack would have been built and our depôt have been in it, only that an idea got about amongst some of the city fathers that instead of a 100 men or so, all told, the advent of a depôt meant the swamping the place with soldiers. Well, we can only hope for that reshuffling of the cards alluded to by one of the speakers; and that Lancashire, with her 12 regiments and a half, may be then called upon to give us back to Nottinghamshire, who has none. Meantime, as hostages to memory, we leave, besides this obelisk just unveiled, our Chinese bell, hanging in the Arboretum Gardens, and our colours over the south door of St. Mary's Church; and, hoping against hope, add au revoir to valé."

60TH KING'S ROYAL RIFLE CORPS. Capt. Howden, 1st Batn., has been noted for an adjutancy of Auxiliary Forces.

72ND SEAFORTH HIGHLANDERS proceed from Parkhurst to Aldershot on Thursday next.

79TH CAMERON HIGHLANDERS. The order for the removal of the regiment from Egypt to Ceylon has been cancelled.

80TH SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE REGIMENT. The detachment under the command of Major Prior, which has been for the last three months engaged in aid of the civil power at Birmingham, returned on Thursday to Lichfield.

93RD ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS. The regiment proceeds from Glasgow to Parkhurst about the 20th inst.

102ND ROYAL DUBLIN FUSILIERS. The order for the removal of the regiment from Ceylon to Egypt has been cancelled.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. We are requested to state that the mural tablet to be erected by the officers of the Army Medical Department in the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, in memory of their brother-officers who fell in the Afghan and Zulu campaigns, has been designed and sculptured by Count Gleichen, and can be viewed any day between 11 and 6, at Count Gleichen's studio, St. James's Palace.

PAY DEPARTMENT. Mr. H. Hainworth, of the War Office, has been engaged during the past week in inspecting the books and records of the pay-offices in Dublin and verifying the cash balances of public funds in the hands of the different paymasters.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

MANCHESTER REGIMENT. The Liverpool Courier says:—"Col. Chambers, who may be almost considered a Liverpool man, has a pretty strong Militia regiment under canvas at Buxton, 36 officers and 1,060 men make an unusual muster in these days, when so many Militia regiments show weakness in numbers."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Artillery detachments go into camp at Shoeburyness to-day. Four brigades, each of four batteries, will be formed, under the command of Major Marwood, 1st East York; Col. Wood, Brighton and Sussex; Col. Versturme, Bristol; and Major Brown, Cheshire and Carnarvon. In the second week, the organisation will be the same, the commanders being Col. Gleadhow, Hull Brigade; Major Grayson, 1st Lancashire; Major Candlin, Manchester Brigade; and Major Mackenzie, Seaham Brigade.

The Queen has presented a prize of £100 to be competed for by the British and Canadian Artillery at the meeting to be held at Quebec next month. The subscriptions towards the sum of £1,000 required to defray the expenses of the visit now amount to £537, including £25 by the Prince of Wales, £105 by the Court of Common Council of the City of London, £50 by Col. the Marquis of Londonderry, £52 10s. by the Drapers' Company, £25 by the Grocers' Company, £20 by Lord Wemyss, £5 each by Lord Strathnairn, Gen. Sir M. M'Murdo, Col. Harcourt, M.P., Lieut.-Col. Lord Percy, Lord Powis, and Col. Viscount Hardinge; £25 each by the 4th Durham, 2nd East York, and 2nd Middlesex Artillery; £20 by Col. Brooshoft, and £15 by the 2nd Northumberland Artillery.

Major Diamond, 2nd Middlesex R.V.; Capt. Holiday, 4th Cheshire R.V.; Capt. Blaydes, 4th East Kent Regt.; Lieuts. Stevenson, 3rd East Kent Regt.; Gillow, 4th East Kent Regt.; Thornton, 4th Royal Sussex Regt.; Pearson, 2nd V.B. Essex Regt.; Langley, Brown, and Dicker, 17th Middlesex R.V.; and Parker, 19th Middlesex R.V., joined the School of Instruction for Officers of Auxiliary Forces at Aldershot on the 1st inst.

Of the eight battalions of Volunteers which go to Aldershot to-day, six provisional and two consolidated, two will be attached to the 1st Brigade, three to the 2nd Brigade, and three to the 3rd Brigade. The official programme is as follows:—Sunday, church parade; Monday, company and battalion drills; Tuesday, instruction in attack and skirmishing under battalion commanders; Wednesday, brigade drill; Thursday, field operations in brigade, opposing forces infantry only; Friday, divisional field day, opposing forces all arms; Saturday, departure.

Service Questions in Parliament.

In the House of Lords on Tuesday, Lord Salisbury asked Lord Granville whether he had any communication to make to their lordships with respect to the affairs of Egypt. Lord Granville stated that the Government had received her Majesty's gracious approval of their proposal that Lord Northbrook should proceed to Egypt for the purpose of advising them both as to the counsels they should give the Government of Egypt in the present circumstances, and also as to any measures which should be taken in connection therewith. Sir Evelyn Baring would shorten his leave for the purpose of accompanying the First Lord. This announcement was received with cheers.

In the House of Commons, at the conclusion of "question time," Mr. Gladstone made his promised statement as to the "step of some importance" contemplated by the Government in reference to Egyptian affairs. Without further preface than an acknowledgment of the serious responsibility imposed on the Government by the failure of the Conference, he said that to assist them in meeting this responsibility her Majesty had been pleased to approve their proposal that Lord Northbrook should proceed to Egypt to inquire, and report, and advise the Government upon the counsels they should give to the Egyptian Government, and also on the steps which it might be necessary to take in connection therewith. Lord Northbrook had accepted this commission, and would proceed to Egypt in the course of the present month. Sir E. Baring would accompany him, and would continue to hold his present office. Sir S. Northcote, who remarked that he did not understand the capacity in which Lord Northbrook was to go to Egypt, asked whether he would receive any instructions, and would his position give him any power or authority over the English officials; also how long he would be away, and whether it would be necessary for him to resign the office he then held. To this Mr. Gladstone replied that there would be no change in Lord Northbrook's position, as his mission would be of a temporary character. His business would be to inquire for the purpose of advising, and though he would receive a commission from her Majesty, he would not receive instructions, being a member of the Cabinet, and his position would not interfere with Sir E. Baring's duties any more than Lord Dufferin's mission interfered with the Consul-General of that day. Sir H. Wolff asked what Lord Northbrook's appellation would be, to which Mr. Gladstone said that was a matter of form not yet settled, but probably he would be known as High Commissioner. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and Mr. Gladstone moved the Vote of Credit of £300,000 to enable the Government to undertake operations for the relief of Gen. Gordon. At the outset he reminded the House of the pledges which the Government had given at various times, especially of the promise of Lord Hartington, to undertake military measures for the rescue of Gen. Gordon if they should be demanded for his safety, and he then canvassed the conflicting reports which have appeared in the papers as to the position of Khartoum since we ceased to have any official communication with him. The general conclusion he drew was that the contingency contemplated by Lord Hartington, when military measures would be necessary, had not yet arisen, but it might arise during the recess, and the object of the vote was to put the Government in a position to meet it if it occurred while Parliament was not sitting. It was also desirable to make certain preparations, the nature of which he thought it advisable not to state. The vote, he added in conclusion, was one rather of principle than an exact estimate of the sum which would be required, and under cover of it the Government would be able to undertake whatever measures might be necessary. Mr. Labouchere opposed the vote. Sir G. Campbell confessed himself in a great dilemma as to how he should vote, but decidedly objected to a "vote of principle" which might involve the country in much larger expenditure. Mr. Bourke said that though the vote was tardy, he would give it his cordial support, and more especially because from the very beginning of Gen. Gordon's mission he had always predicted that a costly expedition would be necessary for his relief. Sir W. Lawson objected to the vote, being opposed to the policy of "smashing" everybody, and would prefer to vote £300,000 to the Mahdi to put down Gen. Gordon. Mr. Ashmead Bartlett severely criticised the dealings of the Government with Gen. Gordon, and accused them of concealing the true facts from the House. Mr. Forster, in supporting the vote, remarked that if it had been proposed some months ago it probably would have been unnecessary, and expressed his fears that unless something was done during the summer he would be in the greatest danger. Lord Galway expressed his opinion that the vote was a mere electioneering trick. Sir J. Hay asked whether there was any truth in the rumour that a portion of the vote was to be spent on subsidising the Abyssinians. To this Lord Hartington replied that he had never heard of the rumour before, and in answer to the criticisms on Gen. Gordon, he said there was no proof that he had received instructions to withdraw. He mentioned also that before long the Government expected to receive much fuller information as to Gen. Gordon's position and intentions through Major Kitchener. Sir S. Northcote denied that the Opposition had in any way made themselves responsible for Gen. Gordon's mission, though they had always wished him well, and had been of opinion that he had not been adequately supported by the Government. Mr. Willis made an acrimonious attack on Gen. Gordon, and Mr. Arnold, Baron H. de Worms, Mr. Illingworth, and Col. Makins made some remarks, and the vote was carried on a division by 174 to 14.

In the House of Lords on Thursday, Lord Granville, replying to Lord De la Warr, stated that as to the powers with which Lord Northbrook was to be invested as High Commissioner to Egypt, the papers on the subject were being drafted, and when the Commission had received her Majesty's signature and approval, it would be laid on the table of the House. In the House of Commons on the same day, Sir S. Northcote announced that he would call attention to the condition of the Egyptian question on Monday, and he put a question to the Prime Minister, in answer to which Mr. Gladstone said it was not in the contemplation of the Government to adopt any scheme in regard to Egyptian finance, either of action or counsel, before receiving Lord Northbrook's report. Answering questions from Lord John Manners and Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Lord E. Fitzmaurice said the Foreign Office had had telegrams containing the letter of Gen. Gordon and the news as to the state of the country about Khartoum, which are identical with the telegrams contained in the Times. In answer to Lord J. Manners, who wished for some explanation of Gen. Gordon's reference to an expedition, Lord Hartington said he supposed the General must have heard of the movements of British troops on the Nile, or of the Arabs with whom Major Kitchener now was. Asked whether the Government would inform Gen. Gordon that an expedition would be sent to him, Lord E. Fitzmaurice desired that notice should be given.

THE ARTILLERY TEAM FOR CANADA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—You are doubtless aware that an invitation has been sent from Canada for a detachment of Volunteer Artillery from this country to go out to Ottawa and compete with the Canadian Artillery. You are probably not, however, aware of the manner in which the selection of the detachment to be sent to represent the Volunteer Artillery of England is being made, nor do I think will anybody be able to explain the system upon which the non-commissioned officers or men are being selected for this competition. I can only say that no pains seem to be taken by the National Artillery Association to ensure that the men most competent to represent the Volunteer Artillery are being chosen.—I am, &c., Gunner.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1884.

FISHMONGERS give good dinners, and so do Goldsmiths, Merchant Taylors, and the like. They and many other bodies, corporate and municipal, which entertain distinguished guests at public banquets, invariably invite and are proud always of the presence of so popular and genial a Royal Duke as the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. He is perforce obliged to "say something" when the usual toast of the services is proposed, as it always is and must be, and it must not be wondered at that there is a certain monotony in speeches in which the theme is constant. When the Duke of Cambridge, therefore, tells his hearers, as he often does in his many speeches at public dinners, that they must pay more money for the Army, he is listened to respectfully, but he addresses himself to the winds and waves of indifferent public opinion under hilarious and frivolous influences, and the winds blow off and the waves roll home, and so an end. But at a banquet he has no chance. The company disperse. "A capital speech from the Duke. He wants more money. That's not our affair." His Royal Highness is naturally expected to return thanks for the Army when he is present at festive gatherings, and he always speaks so well that it is a pity he does not deliver himself more frequently in the Great Council of the nation, where his words must have attentive respect and, may be, results. In administrative matters, the Duke of Cambridge feels it to be his duty to guard the expression of his opinion from the general dining public. On matters of policy he is generally silent, even in Parliament. But he is always rejoiced when he can pay a compliment to officers and men for what they have done on service; and when he is dissatisfied, he loyally keeps the expression of his judgment from the knowledge of those whom it does not directly concern. It must be admitted that the Duke of Cambridge could not continue to occupy his present position if he were in his speeches openly to appeal to the public to resist the military reforms he has to carry into effect, or if he were to set himself up against the policy of the day in regard to the Army. Nevertheless, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief could, without impropriety, we conceive—nay, we are sure he ought—say in his place in Parliament what he tells Fishmongers and their brethren, and he should boldly declare that the Army is not large enough for the work it has to do, and that if the country wants the work done, it must be prepared to pay for it, if he thinks so. Now, here we are shouting out full cry, veiled under such phrases as "indefinite Protectorate," for the appropriation of Egypt. There are demands for an expedition to Khartoum, to relieve Gordon and the garrisons. There are also certain parties who would like to squash Boers. There be others who would like to occupy Candahar. The necessity for keeping up a strong front on the North-west Frontier of India must be accepted as a fixed fact. The armies of the Native States in India are felt by Mr. Andrew, and the Editor of the Times, and other people, to be a source of danger which they would certainly dry up, if they thought they could do so without danger, or had surplus force enough to effect. Such objects require men—men by thousands and tens of thousands more than we have, and men by thousands need millions of pounds. But our establishments have no surplusage of force. Not only that; they are short of their proper strength by thousands. Who knows all that, and more, better than the Duke of Cambridge? Where should he raise his voice to tell the country what he knows and feels? Surely not at public dinners! The place in which a Royal Duke at the head of the Queen's Army ought to speak of the wants of the Army, and of obligations of the nation towards it, is in Parliament.

The Military Secretary will not hold a levée until further notice.

The Duke of Cambridge, who generally takes his water cure at Homburg, will go to Kissingen this year. His Royal Highness intends to leave town immediately, but there may be reasons for delay, arising from certain military business at Pall Mall, to prevent the Duke starting as soon as he wishes.

Colonel Geddes has accepted the command of the Regimental District, Belfast.

Portions of the dismembered statue of the Duke of Wellington arrived at Aldershot yesterday by road, and further portions will arrive to-day. The statue will be taken charge of by the Ordnance Store Department, and placed in a building which has been specially prepared to receive it, where it will probably remain for an indefinite period. No preparations whatever have been made at Aldershot to prepare a pedestal or lay a foundation for the statue. It is not even certain that the site fixed for it by the Commander-in-Chief, near the Cambridge Hospital and Head-quarter huts, will now be adhered to, it being the opinion of many at the Camp that a much better position could be found for it.

Colonel Fairclough having attained the prescribed age, is about to be placed on the Retired List, from the 18th instant.

The following Divisional Order was recently promulgated at Aldershot:—"In future, volunteers from Militia regiments wishing to join any regiment, corps, or department, will be sent to the medical officer in charge of the brigade, corps, or department to which the volunteer wishes to go to for examination and final approval." Should a Militiaman elect to join a corps in the Mediterranean or the West Indies, it is surely not contemplated to send him thus far for medical inspection. This very original Order stands in need of elucidation.

Captain Mortimer, 7th Fusiliers, has been appointed to the Staff at Edinburgh.

During the absence of the First Lord of the Admiralty in Egypt—and it is understood that, out of "pure politeness," no important move will be made by any of the Powers—the business of the Navy will be carried on at first by Messrs. Brown, Jones, and Robinson, assisted by Sir T. Brassey, Lord Alcester, Sir C. Key, and others, whilst Lord Northbrook is engaged in reporting and advising at Cairo. Brown has, however, some serious business to attend to, about August 12, in Aberdeenshire; Jones has to leave town at once to make observations on the current of the Tweed near Sprouston Dub; and Robinson (not Spencer) is expected at Aix-les-Bains at the end of the month. Sir T. Brassey will probably be taking the sun somewhere off Cape Wrath about this day week, Lord Alcester has been seen experimenting with two new machine-guns (No. 12, breech-loading, hammerless) at a back window of the Admiralty; and Sir Cooper has "engaged rooms" with marine views, so that the affairs of the Navy will possibly be conducted by the Hall Porter and some of the Clerical Staff at Whitehall for several months to come. After a time Lord Northbrook will find it very trying to his constitution to have to drink so many cups of Turkish coffee every day as he goes the rounds of official life in Cairo; and as the quails will not be in for some weeks, yet he will have to go up to the First Cataract—nay, he may proceed to Wady Halfa, and have to interview the Mudirs from Girgeh southwards before he can ascertain all the facts of the situation. One must always be on the spot to understand, report, and advise. Meantime, there are five British Generals in Egypt, all ready for work, and there was in Tuesday's Gazette a great seconding of officers for service with the Egyptian Army, for which they will be fit in a year or two, when they have learned Arabic. The Gymkhana sports at Alexandria and Cairo will receive a great impetus, the "bar" at Shepheard's will look up, and the Egyptian Exchequer will be further depleted; but all these little arrangements may cover very serious work, and the attitude which the Metropolitan Press recommends the Government to take may turn out to be one which can be maintained with little or no ease. Possibly Lord Northbrook may superintend naval operations on the Nile from his quarters in the Ismaileeyah, and Lord Wolseley may personally conduct (aided by Messrs. Cook and Sons) an expedition from Abdin Palace to Khartoum. This may appear to be very absurd, and yet some stranger things have been seen in our time. Mr. Gladstone told the House that Sir E. Baring would bear the same relations to Lord Northbrook that Sir E. Malet did to Lord Dufferin,—from which it must be inferred that Sir E. Baring will not remain after Lord Northbrook goes, unless he assumes the control of the Government, and Khedive, Nubar, &c., are pensioned off, and put en retraite.

Captain J. W. Murray R.A., succeeds Major Rothwell on the Staff of the Intelligence Department.

Colonel French, commanding the local forces in Queensland, has issued a special report on the Volunteer Force, in which he refers to the unsatisfactory numbers that turned out for inspection. He says that the country, in depending on the present organisation, leans on a broken reed; that there are many good officers, but that others are without the least knowledge of their duties, and that the same remark applies to the non-commissioned officers; that the men are fairly well up in their drill, proportionately, more so than the officers, the Metropolitan Corps of Engineers excepted; and that the up-country force suffers from lack of public interest.

The military funeral of General Sir W. Codrington will take place to-day at 11.30, at London Necropolis, Brookwood, Surrey (Woking Cemetery). Special train from Waterloo Station to cemetery at 10.10 a.m.

A Committee has been called together at Simla, consisting of Colonel Bushman, 9th Lancers, as President, Lieutenant-Colonel Davidson, 18th Bengal Cavalry, and Captain Baden-Powell, 13th Hussars, to draw up instructions as to executing cavalry movements in accordance with the general principles laid down in the Horse Guards' Manual. These instructions are to be issued in time to enable regiments to be privately practised before meeting in brigade at the cold-weather camps of exercise.

Captain Holme, 3rd Buffs, has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Lennox in Egypt.

A question has arisen in connection with the recent order respecting the re-enlistment of pensioners for five years as to whether those serjeant-majors whose re-enlistment has been authorised will be granted warrant rank, irrespective of the age prescribed for that appointment by the existing regulations.

The Rev. T. M. Eustace, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge, has been appointed Head Master of the Oxford Military College.

"It is not an exaggeration to say that the land transport failed completely." This is what Lieutenant-Commander C. F. Goodrich, of the United States Navy, says in his report on the Egyptian Campaign of 1882. It is curious that only 11 days after the publication of the article communicated to the Times in laudation of the War Office arrangements in Egypt, such a statement from an entirely unprejudiced critic should have appeared in the same journal. "The Army," says Commander Goodrich, "is stated to have outrun its transport; but such a state of affairs ought not to have existed at 20 miles from the base." The truth is that the Army had little or no transport to outrun; it found, by one of those fortunate chances which Arabi's ignorance gave it, a railway almost uninjured, and a canal but little interfered with; the enemy thus supplied the means of moving and feeding the invading force, which must otherwise have either waited to organise its tardy or inefficient transport, or have advanced only to starve. How many weeks would have been wasted in waiting for the arrival of the materials from the landing-wharves and for the railway plant, how long it would have taken to teach the untrained railway corps, to organise the drivers, who were landed as a mere rabble, to heal the sore backs and feed up the half-starved mules, is, fortunately, thanks to Arabi, only a matter of speculation. But the failure of the preparations which has been laid bare by Dr. Cameron's Committee was apparent to the foreigner on the spot, and his report becomes valuable evidence in the enquiry. Well may Dr. Cameron make the Administration "a present" of the minor points, and take his stand on the broad assertion that "the transport failed completely, and failed through the attempted adherence to a rigid system, absolutely unsuited to the country in which operations were to be conducted." It is this system which is on its trial; can there be any doubt of the verdict? Would it be a great stretch to imagine the reply which the American critic would give to the assertion of the Surveyor-General, when pressed for lighter carts, that "a cart is a cart, and there is nothing else." "Wal, stranger, that's so, and I guess you'd better send towel-horses to draw them, it would save forage!"

Brevet Major Mansel, Rifle Brigade, has been appointed to act as Aide-de-Camp to Brigadier-General Brice, commanding a Division of the Bombay Army.

Major Grant, who so very greatly distinguished himself in the pursuit of and "engagement" with the Turkish deserters the other day on and across the Nile is, we believe, son of Sir Patrick Grant. Filius patris dignus. For coolness, courage, and constancy in circumstances of extraordinary danger we have scarcely a greater instance on record than the fine feat of arms that officer performed, and it will be very unjust if any technical objections be raised to the official recognition of his conduct by the Queen.

A Distinguished-Service Reward of £50 per annum has been bestowed upon Major John Simpson, 42nd Highlanders (Black Watch).

A volume is about to appear from the firm of Messrs. Blackwood, entitled, "Fifteen Years of Army Reform," which is likely, we are told, to create a stir in military circles. It will be, as its title implies, a review of the military policy of the War Office since the advent of Lord Cardwell, and will enable those who wish to ascertain the truth to judge how far the assurances of the optimists who have been telling us that the Army has been regenerated by means of short service and the other fads foisted upon us by our civilian administrators, in opposition to the wishes and advice of the much-abused military school,—the "drones and dullards" of the profession of arms—are justified, by placing in their hands an immense amount of data gleaned from bluebooks, reports, &c.

Lieutenant the Hon. M. Talbot, R.E., has been selected for duty with the British Commission for the Delimitation of the North-West Boundary of Afghanistan.

Recent sanitary precautions at Aldershot have been the means of causing some of the "permanent fixtures" there to speedily dispose of the stock of their rather extensive farm-yards on the borders of the Camp. Cows, goats, and even pigs, have got brief notice to quit, and fowls are barely tolerated. If the sanitary officer would only pursue his investigations further, in the central parts of the Camps, he would find not a few nuisances that might be abated for the great good of all. In a military camp, a poultry-yard under a sleeping-room window, for instance, is neither desirable nor necessary at any time, but more especially during such sultry weather as we are now experiencing. Such dangerous nuisances, appealing loudly to the olfactory nerves, may now be found in many parts of the Camp.

Major-General Scratchley has retired from his position as Consulting Engineer to the New South Wales Government, and is succeeded by Major-General H. Steward, late Royal Engineers.

A recent divisional field-day of opposing forces of all arms, at Aldershot, was brought to an abrupt conclusion before half the "idea" was carried out, in consequence, as it afterwards transpired, of the attack being pushed home so fast, and the retreating troops so closely followed up, in violation of umpire rules, that the chief umpire, to prevent the men coming into personal collision, ordered the "halt" to be sounded; and this having been taken up by the Infantry buglers as the "cease fire," which signifies the termination of the fight, the field-day was by this mistake brought to a premature end. It is the A, B, C of Umpire Rules, known alike to officers and men, that troops should never in the open approach each other nearer than 100 yards, or in the most enclosed country or woods, than 50 yards. The Lieutenant-General Commanding has had something to say about these operations to all concerned. His strictures, though they do not err on the side of severity, are much to the point; and, in conclusion, he reminds General or other superior officers of opposing forces "that they cannot ride close up to an enemy's position without being held, if fired on or charged at, to be either killed or taken prisoners, and therefore put out of action." This should certainly be added to the Umpire Rules.

HOTCHKISS AND NORDENFELT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In your issue of the 2nd inst. you give, under the above heading, a sort of apology for one of your staff, in consequence of a letter from Capt. R. Macneill, who offers to "correct an error" in one of your previous issues. This subject is of such minor importance that I would have hesitated to occupy your space with this reply, had it not been that Capt. Macneill's note may easily be misread to convey the impression that my ammunition and mountings were not approved of. On the subject of the ammunition, your notes of July 20, as well as those of Capt. Macneill, are somewhat unclear. The facts are these:—When the Admiralty ordered 6-pounder shell-guns from Mr. Hotchkiss, as well as from myself, both the manufacturers were asked to make their guns such that each gun, when required, could fire the ammunition belonging to the other gun,—which meant that the chamber and the outward form of the cartridges must be the same for both guns, and we agreed upon the chamber of the Hotchkiss gun, which was the smallest of the two, giving considerably less velocity than my larger chamber with heavier powder charge. Upon all other points than the outside form of the cartridge, each gun retains its own system of ammunition; my solid cartridge case, as well as my powder, fuzes, gas-checks, and shells being different from those to be supplied by Mr. Hotchkiss. On the subject of the mounting, Capt. Macneill's statement that the Nordenfelt 6-pounder is to be adapted to the Hotchkiss mounting is based upon entirely incorrect information. All my 6-pounder guns are to be supplied with my own mountings, with elevating and traversing gear of the same description as those used for all my other naval guns, and I understand that the Hotchkiss guns will be supplied with his system of mounting with aiming by means of his shoulder piece, which has not hitherto been used in the English Navy,—the results that will be obtained by these different systems of mountings will decide which is to be adopted for further orders of 6-pounder carriages another year. Both the carriages will have the same dimensions of socket, so as to interchange into the stands for the guns which will be supplied to the several vessels by the Constructors' Department of the Admiralty.—I am, &c., Thos. Nordenfelt.

[We have now printed letters from Capt. Macneill, representing Mr. Hotchkiss; and Mr. Nordenfelt, representing himself; and must let the rival houses, as to whom we had nearly repeated the exclamation of Mercutio, fight it out elsewhere.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS. —The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

THE DEFENCE COURT-MARTIAL.

The Court-martial on Capt. Edwin John Pollard, of H.M.S. Defence, for negligently hazarding his ship, by allowing her to come into collision with the Valiant off Bantry Bay on July 18, re-assembled on board the Royal Adelaide on Friday, August 1, at 4 p.m. The Hon. Bernard Coleridge, barrister, read a long statement in defence of the prisoner. He said that in a falling and uncertain light the signal was made to execute a difficult and intricate manœuvre, and that he ordered Lieutenant Gubbins to calculate the distance between the Defence and the Hector. Lieutenant Gubbins miscalculated the distance, for which he contended he was not to blame. He acted on Lieutenant Gubbins's statement, and intended, when the Valiant's stern was clear of the Defence's bow, to shift his helm hard a-port, go full speed ahead, and come up astern of the Valiant. Owing to this mis-calculation his ship was brought into a difficult position. When he saw this he converted the impending catastrophe of an end-on collision, which would probably have sunk one or both of the ships, into a collision which did very little damage. In conclusion, he said that he had been in the Navy for 38 years, and was close on flag rank. It was in the power of the Court to blot out the whole of his professional past and to destroy his professional future, but he did not appeal to sympathy. It appeared from an Admiralty record of previous courts-martial that from the 27th to the 29th of November, 1876, a court-martial sat on board the Royal Adelaide for the trial of Captain Pollard on two charges—first, for having hazarded H.M.S. Tenedos, and, secondly, for having committed an act to the prejudice of good order and naval discipline in marking a written statement purporting that the Tenedos was taken seaward of the rock, whereas he well knew that she passed between the rock and the shore. On that occasion the first charge was declared to be proved and the second not proved, and Capt. Pollard was dismissed from H.M.S. Tenedos. The Court was then cleared, and when reopened the Judge-Advocate read the following judgment:—"The Court, having found that the charge against the prisoner is proved, in that he hazarded H.M.S. Defence by the improper manner in which he attempted to perform the very simple manœuvre ordered, adjudges him, the said Capt. Pollard, to be dismissed from H.M.S. Defence."

Capt. E. J. Pollard, at the close of the court-martial at Devonport on Friday evening, proceeded direct on board the Defence, and when about to finally leave the ship, the whole of the ship's company were mustered on the quarter-deck to wish him good-bye. Capt. Pollard was visibly affected when saying good-bye, stating that he would probably never again set foot on the deck of a British man-of-war. He was a ruined man in his profession, and his hopes were blighted. He was disgraced, but certainly not dishonoured, for doing his duty. After shaking hands with the officers and others around him he left the ship. Capt. Pollard entered the service as a naval cadet so long ago as October, 1846, was made a sub-lieutenant in May, 1853, lieutenant in February, 1855, commander in August, 1861, and captain in April, 1868, and has the following war services:—Was mate of the Vengeance during operations in the Black Sea from the commencement of the Crimean War until April, 1855, including the attack on sea defences of Sebastopol, 1854 (Crimean and Turkish medals, Sebastopol clasp); as lieutenant commanding the Woodcock took part in the bombardment and capture of Canton, December, 1857, and repulsed a very determined attack of fire rafts on his ship at the same place; in 1858 he took part in the operations in the North of China, including the capture of Tientsin, and was engaged in the bombardment and capture of the city of Namtow, August, 1858; in 1860 he was employed in command of the Staunch in the Gulf of Pechili, and was present at the second capture of the Peiho forts and Tientsin; was specially mentioned for zeal in the Commander-in-Chief's despatches whilst engaged in carrying troops and stores and disembarking them at Tientsin, and was promoted for this service (China medal, Canton and Taku, 1860, clasps).

A sad accident happened on board the Pelican on leaving St. Vincent for Monte Video, en route to the Pacific station, by which the ship's cooper, John Zachariah Newcombe, aged 40 years, was fatally injured. A hawser reel, holding a 5-in. hawser, screw pendants and falls, slipped from its stand through the rolling of the ship, and fell on him, causing a fracture of the spine, from the effects of which he died on the afternoon of May 19. His body was buried at sea the following afternoon. He leaves a wife and three children.

The Racer, composite gun-vessel, was launched at Devonport on Wednesday afternoon. She is one of the Acorn class, and sister-ship to the Reindeer and Mariner. She was commenced in April, 1883. Her dimensions are:—Length between perpendiculars, 167 ft.; extreme breadth, 32 ft.; depth of hold, 16 ft. 3 in.; her displacement being 950 tons, and her engines of 850-horse power. She differs from the Reindeer, however, in her armament, which will consist of eight 5-in. breech-loading guns, mounted on Vavasseur carriages—two being placed on the forecastle, two aft, and four on the broadside; the Reindeer, which is armed with six guns only, having been too far advanced to enable the necessary alterations to be made when it was determined to increase the armament of vessels of that class.

The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief visited Aldershot on Wednesday, and held a review of the Cavalry and Royal Horse Artillery, which assembled in the vicinity of the Long Valley about 9.30 a.m. The troops returned to quarters shortly after 12 o'clock. The Duke of Cambridge returned by train to London in the afternoon.

"Health Exhibition."—"Visitors should not fail to view the fine exhibit of Messrs. Rose and Co., London, of their Lime Juice Cordial. and other Lime Juice beverages, at Stand No. 116, in main transept. The exhibit includes a fine display of the Jamaica Lime Fruit from which these delicious non-alcoholic beverages are made. Their Lime Juice Cordial supplies a most refreshing summer drink in water, effervescing in all aerated waters. No beverage has received higher recommendation from the medical profession as eminently wholesome."—See Lancet. No table should be without it. The Wholesale Stores are 11 Curtain Road, Finsbury.

The prospectus of the Bristol Joint-Stock Bank will be found in our advertisement columns, and we understand the project has received large and influential local support. The great increase in the wealth and population of Bristol, where the proportion of banks is only one to every 28,000 of the population, whereas in some smaller towns the proportion is one to every 7,000, as well as the names of the directors, &c., should ensure the success of the new concern.

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street, scientifically adapts his improved Spectacles to strengthen and assist the weakest sights. ◆

The OLYMPIC has been reopened with a new farcical comedy, by Mr. Joseph Derrick, called "Twins," in which the idea of mistaken identity, arising from the close resemblance of two brothers, once more receives humorous treatment. The piece is characterised by comical dialogue, ludicrous situations, and an entire disregard of probabilities. Mr. Edward Righton, aided by rapid changes of costume, cleverly succeeds in portraying not only a personage known as the benevolent Professor of Bangelpore, but his twin brother, who occupies the humble position of head-waiter at a Ramsgate Hotel. Miss Carlotta Leclercq effectively represents a buxom widow yielding to the blandishments of the professor; Miss Eliza Rudd is the waiter's jealous wife; and adequate support is besides afforded by Miss Emma Ritta, Mr. Edward Lyons, Mr. F. Desmond, Mr. H. Vincent, and Mr. J. W. Bradbury. A special performance of this lively piece is announced for to-night, Saturday, in aid of a charitable institution, in which the Marquis of Lorne and Lady Archibald Campbell take great interest. Miss Carlotta Leclercq gave a special matinée here on Wednesday, when Mr. Bartley Campbell's American drama, called "Fate," was successfully produced in this country. The house was well filled, and the applause bestowed on the actors and actresses was frequent and well-merited.

At the ALHAMBRA, Mr. F. C. Burnand's burlesque of "Black-Eyed See-usan," which 18 years since started on its long career of popularity at the Royalty, has been expanded by the author into a comic, operatic spectacle, adapted to the requirements of the larger stage. Additional songs have been provided, and rustic and nautical ballets embellish the three acts, illustrated by as many picturesque scenes representing "The Downs," "on the cliffs near Dover," and the deck of her Majesty's ship, the Polly Phemus. Mr. E. Danvers, the only member of the original cast now available, retains his old position as Dame Hatley; Mr. Arthur Roberts gives a new but thoroughly amusing rendering of Captain Crosstree; and Miss Bessie Bonehill and Miss Mulholland are vivacious representatives of William and Susan. In other characters, Miss Kate Leamar, and Messrs. George Honey, G. Mudie, F. Storey, and Stuart Paget contribute to the enjoyment of a brisk and lively entertainment.

Mr. Augustus Daly's New York Dramatic Company, now occupying TOOLE'S THEATRE, well maintain their reputation by presenting clever embodiments of the eccentric personages introduced in another farcical comedy, adapted from the German, and called "Dollars and Sense," a punning designation best understood by American audiences. There is no novelty in the story, but admirable acting compensates for lack of interest in the plot. Mr. John Drew is the friendly young lawyer preserving the domestic happiness of husband and wife, so adroitly depicted by Mr. Lewis and Mrs. Gilbert; a sham Egyptian Colonel is ably personated by Mr. Charles Leclercq; and a prominent feature of the piece is the exhilarating performance of a madcap belle of New York by the comely Miss Ada Rehan.

At the GAIETY, Mr. Edward Terry concludes his present engagement on Saturday next, when he takes his annual benefit.

An autumn season, under the direction of Mr. E. Brookfield, will be commenced this (Saturday) evening at the HAYMARKET. A new version, in two acts, by Mr. W. H. Pollock, of "Le Reveil du Lion," by MM. Jaime and Bayard, will be brought out under the title of "Evergreen." A previous adaptation of the comedy was produced at the Haymarket, November, 1847, called "The Roused Lion." Mr. Benjamin Webster and Mrs. Keeley then played the prominent parts.

This evening will be commenced the Promenade Concerts season at COVENT GARDEN THEATRE. A numerous band has been engaged, with Mr. Gwyllym Crowe as conductor, and Madame Rose Hersee, Madame Enriquez, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maas are among the vocalists.

Mr. Henry Irving will sail from Liverpool with his Lyceum Company at the end of September, and open at Montreal in the second week of October.

All acquainted with the varied talents displayed by the Vokes family, and knowing the high esteem in which the sisters are held in private life, will regret to hear that Miss Jessie Vokes expired on Monday night, at a comparatively early age. An attack of malarious fever while on her last tour through America had for some months past seriously affected her health. Her first appearance on the stage was as a child at the Surrey.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.—These purifying and soothing remedies demand the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when it should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction should cause pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to reduce inflammation and to purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases, which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. This Ointment checks the local mischief. The Pills restore the vital powers.

NEWTON COLLEGE, SOUTH DEVON.

President of Council—The EARL of DEVON.
Head Master—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll., Camb. (assisted by twelve Resident Graduates).

The system is arranged so as to embrace every kind of Education necessary for the Universities, Army and Navy, Civil Services, Commercial Life, Colonial Life, &c. There are Classical and Modern sides, quite distinct, with all appliances for a Modern Education separate from that required for the Universities and learned Professions.

The success of the School has been undoubtedly due to the large staff of Masters, and the individual attention which can thus be given to boys of different calibre. The New School Buildings also are a great advantage, and teaching is carried on with facility in the large, airy rooms.

After nearly ten years of work at improvements, the Council feel that they can now offer educational advantages, unrivalled in two Western Counties.

There is a School Chapel, large swimming bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, eight racquet and fives courts, 20 acres of beautifully situated playing fields, &c., and as a proof of the favour extended to the School under the present regime.

The NUMBERS have RISEN from 22 to OVER 150.

A special feature of the work is that of Preparing Boys in a Junior School for the larger Public Schools.

Since 1882, Six Scholarships have been won at Winchester and Marlborough by Newton Boys, and the work in the Examination all round has been quite up to this standard. Owing to its situation, the College has been able to render great assistance to delicate boys, and the highest references can be given on these points. Special Classes for Woolwich and Sandhurst.

WE learn that the days of the Army Medical Department are numbered, and that ere long it will blossom forth as the "Medical Staff," and that the Army Hospital Corps will appear as the "Medical Staff Corps." The Warrant is in type, and may be published at any moment. It would be premature to speak of its provisions until it is actually issued, but there is now no doubt it will be on the lines of the recommendations of Lord Morley's Committee, and that a closer amalgamation will be made between the Medical Officers and their men. It is also understood that both officers and men will wear scarlet,—a matter of comparatively little moment in the field, as all, probably, will be dressed in the new khakee the same as the Line. As a kind of "avant courier" to the Warrant, an Army Circular, dated August 1, has just made its appearance, in which are laid down not only the regulations for the examination of Surgeons for promotion to rank of Surgeon-Major,—a reinstitution, in fact, of an old rule,—but also the regulations for the examination of Surgeons-Major to the rank of Brigade-Surgeon. As regards the first, it is quite fair and proper that medical officers should, like the rest of the Army, prove their fitness for advancement by passing an examination, and the only wonder is that the test was discontinued. The subjects selected are reasonable, and all medical officers should be proficient in them before being promoted to the rank of Surgeon-Major. The examination is to be passed between the fifth and tenth year of service; but if officers have passed an examination for a Fellowship of any Royal College of Surgeons or Physicians, or have obtained a diploma in hygiene and state medicine, they will be exempted from such portions of the examination as are covered by the above degrees. These must have been passed five years subsequent to entry into the service, or they will not be allowed to count. This is rather illiberal, as it is hardly fair to call on a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in England to pass a second examination merely because he has hastened to take the higher degree soon after he entered the service. Again, we see that before promotion a Surgeon must procure a certificate from "a recognised teacher of surgery" in a medical school regarding his proficiency in operative surgery. This is certainly an imputation on the knowledge and skill of Army Surgeons in general, and a practical admission by the authorities that the senior officers of the "Medical Staff" are not capable of judging of the proficiency of a Surgeon serving under them. In former years it was sufficient for an Assistant-Surgeon to produce the certificate of the Surgeon of his regiment, but now the Army Medical Officer must go to a civilian, and must, moreover, pay a heavy fee, varying from £5 to £10, for a course in operative surgery. Will the Government pay this sum, or must the medical officer be at the loss? We fear the rules for this examination have been drawn up rather loosely, and trust they will be revised before being put in force. If, however, we have to express an opinion somewhat adverse to the Circular regarding the examination of Surgeons, what can be said regarding that of Surgeons-Major for promotion to the rank of Brigade-Surgeon? A more ill-considered step has never before been taken than to ask officers ranking as lieutenant-colonels, many of them of 26 years' service and over, to submit to an examination. It is deplorably humiliating that such a step should have been taken, and we will be much surprised if the profession does not rise against the Director-General, and compel him to cancel, at all events, some portion, if not all, of the proposed examination. The heading of this portion of the Circular lays down that only Surgeons-Major of twenty years' service or over are eligible, and it further says "the examination will be optional." It proceeds to lay down the necessary qualifications each officer must possess; then states in para. 9 that "before a Surgeon-Major can be selected for promotion to the rank of Brigade-Surgeon," he must pass the examination laid down. This seems to us rather paradoxical, but no doubt it means that if a Surgeon-Major does not wish to present himself for examination, he need not do so; and thus bearing the Government stamp of ignorance and incapacity, he will be permitted to remain in the service and continue to perform exactly the same duties as those who qualify, at all events, till the latter become administrative officers. The subjects of the examination are fourteen in number, chiefly on administrative points, and are, no doubt, matters with which medical officers ought to be acquainted; but we think there are many other ways of ascertaining an officer's knowledge of administration than by obliging him to pass an examination in set questions which many men will be able to get up, though utterly unfit for administrative duties. The last subject laid down certainly surprises us, viz.:—"Questions on Operative Surgery and Practical Medicine will also form part of this Examination." We can hardly believe Dr. Crawford, the able Director-General of the Department, could have intended the slur he has cast on his officers by such a rule. In no service in the world would officers who have served for twenty-five years and more be asked to pass an examination in the rudiments of their profession, and we shall be much surprised if we do not hear some very strong comments on this point in the professional journals, and see action taken by the various Universities and Colleges in defence of their graduates. We can only think that Dr. Crawford has been wrongly advised, and we are sure that this portion of the examination will, sooner or later, be cancelled or modified. Had this examination been instituted for officers under twenty years' service, we would have been satisfied; but it is degrading to old officers to be exposed to such an indignity, and its only result will be depleting the upper Executive ranks of the Department, by driving old officers to retire in disgust.

THE experimental firing, "Ship guns versus Fortifications," at Inchkeith, which were finished this week, are eminently satisfactory from many points of view. In the first place, nothing can be more conducive to a thorough and exhaustive clearing-up of a question than the personal interest shown by the heads of Departments. At Inchkeith, Sir A. Clarke passed three days on the deck of H.M.S. Sultan, in continuous deliberations with Brigadier-General Reilly, who represents the government factories where all the guns (the ship as well as those in the battery at Inchkeith) and their ammunition were constructed; the staff of these generals consisted of some of the most highly trained officers of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, including Major O'Callaghan and Captain Goold-Adams from the Shoeburyness School of Gunnery, Colonel Schaw, R.E., Captain Clarke, and Lieutenant Nathan; while the naval element was ably represented by Captain Tracey of the Sultan, with his Commander and Gunnery Lieutenant, Captain Jackson, of the Small-Arms Committee, and Lieutenant Meryon, of the gunnery-ship Excellent. We mention these names amongst many others especially to show that these were serious and practical experiments from which much more can be hoped than by mere simple experimental firing against targets, and under such circumstances as are usually available at ordinary affairs of this nature; further, that during these three days the two Generals who are responsible for the Fortifications and Artillery in the British Isles, as well as in Greater Britain, had more opportunities of exchanging views during actual firing, and of hearing unbiassed opinions from their juniors, than perhaps could occur in months, or even years, in their offices; and nothing can be more useful to any one branch of the Service than such opportunities, which allow them to ventilate their ideas under the searching criticism of the other services. All honour is due to Sir Andrew Clarke, who, we believe, originated these experiments, and to General Reilly, who took a great personal interest in them. Admiral Sir A. Cooper Key also showed his appreciation of the importance of the trials by arranging matters so that a first-class ironclad, the Sultan, was placed at their disposal. The main object of the experiments was to ascertain whether a gun placed in a simple barbette—that is, in a position above the glacis of a round emplacement, and its gun detachment, would be so much exposed to the fire directed from an attacking ship, that it might become necessary to adopt the more costly arrangements for lowering the gun when not actually firing as originated by Colonel Moncrieff, and since modified or improved by others. The results may be stated in a few words to be that in a country like England, where the question of expense must not on any account stand in the way of efficiency, it will become almost imperative to adopt the principle of raising and lowering the barbette guns, as soon as this can be done by such simple means that there can be no risk of such a carriage failing to act even under adverse circumstances. The machine-guns were very destructive, especially against the dummies (representing the gun detachment) which were put into position around the gun. All the machine-guns did very fair work. The shell fire from the heavy guns of the Sultan was most instructive to all concerned. The first day their shrapnel did no harm at all to the gun fired at in the fort, in consequence of the fuzes of these shells not acting properly, or from not being properly understood; but on the third day the fuzes acted far more satisfactorily. There must always be considerable difficulty when the fuzes for the naval guns are provided by the Army Establishment, because the fuze-tables vary so much for different classes of projectiles; for instance, the fuze-table for a projectile provided with the old studs is not correct for a gas-check projectile, and vice versâ. One good result of these trials is that all of those who took part in them realised the necessity of having the fuzes marked with distances, so that no separate table is required by which to set them. This would further permit of another improvement which is absolutely necessary, viz., that the fuzes can be set for the range after the projectile is brought to the gun, and not as hitherto, before the projectile has been brought from below. The third day's practice showed the terrible effect of these large shrapnels when a correctly set fuze acts properly; each shell swept the inside of the emplacement so completely that no gunner could have stood up to a gun mounted as at Inchkeith. The emplacements would also be much improved if opened to the rear instead of the complete "well" shape. It must not be supposed that in actual war the gun in the emplacement would be so badly treated by the ship fire, as was the case at Inchkeith, because the smoke produced by the firing of the shore-guns, and the demoralising effect of their fire on the gunners on board the attacking ships would, of course, seriously interfere with their accuracy of fire. It may be broadly stated that a fortification barbette-gun, mounted on the raising and lowering principle, would probably be quite able to defend itself against the large guns of a ship at long ranges, and that in order to protect the fortification gun against the ship's machine-gun fire, a number of machine-guns must also be mounted on the forts away from the heavy guns. The rifle-calibre machine-guns of an attacking vessel would never have as good a chance in actual war as they had at Inchkeith, as no ironclad would dare to steam at slow speed within 1,000 yards of the shore; but the 1-inch guns, and the wonderful accuracy of the 6-pounder quick-firing guns at long ranges, would have to be provided against.

FOR some time past it has been known that the number of Militia officers was far below the authorised establishment, and that the deficiency was rather on the increase than otherwise; but few people, we venture to think, were prepared for the statement recently made by Lord Hartington, in reply to Sir F. Milner, that "the actual vacancies for officers of Militia amount to 795." We have before us three official Returns containing information as to the progress of this deficiency, viz., (1), the Return moved for by Sir A. Gordon, and which was presented to Parliament in April last; (2), the general Annual Return of the British Army for 1881; and (3), the general Annual Return of the British Army for 1882 (the return for 1883 has not yet been issued). The statistics given in these several returns are rather difficult to reconcile, and all the more so from the fact that the series of years over which Sir Alexander Gordon's return extends are made up to March 31 of each year, while the general Annual Returns are apparently made up, as far as concerns the Militia, to July 1 of each year. The Annual Returns state that on July 1, 1881, there was a deficiency of 256 officers of Militia which, by July 1, 1882, had increased to 348. The Gordon Return states that from March 31, 1881, to March 31, 1882, there was a surplus of appointments over retirements in the commissioned ranks of the Militia of 22 officers; but that from March 31, 1882, to March 31, 1883, there was a surplus of retirements over appointments of 161. These statements taken together appear somewhat extraordinary, and supposing them all to be in accordance with fact, it follows that, as between July 1, 1881, and July 1, 1882, a total of 92 officers were lost to the Militia, and between March 31, 1881, and March 31, 1882, there was a gain of 22 officers,—therefore, between March 31, 1882, and July 1, 1882, there was a total loss of 114 officers. Thus we find that, in accordance with the Gordon Return, the number of officers still further lost to the Militia from July 1, 1882, to March 31, 1883, was 47. Taking the two Returns together, we find that on March 31, 1883, there was a total deficiency of 395. We have gone thus minutely into figures in order to obtain a standpoint from which will be seen the fearful rapidity with which the deficiency is going on increasing. The Gordon Return further states that from March 31, 1883, to March 31, 1884, the deficiency was increased by another 227 vacancies. This number, added to the above, will give a total of 622 vacancies on March 31, 1884. But Lord Hartington stated on July 24 that "the actual vacancies for officers of Militia amount to 795," which gives a further increase of 173 vacancies since March 31 last. The position thus revealed is positively alarming. Lord Hartington says that "in 11 regiments the vacancies amount to half the number of officers." And this being so, we need no longer wonder at the reports we have heard on all sides of the miserable state of inefficiency exhibited by many Militia regiments during the recent trainings. One of the causes of this state of things is well known, and, to our mind, easily remedied. There is not the least doubt that large numbers of young Militia subalterns join their regiments with the sole object of serving their two trainings and then entering the competition for a commission in the Line. None of these will ever become Militia officers really, for those who obtain their Line commissions will at once join their Line regiments, while those who fail to gain that prize will immediately resign their Militia commissions, leaving the Militia regiments worse off than if they had never joined. The present system is not only unfair to the Militia, but if it be allowed to remain unaltered, it will assuredly lead to the ultimate disorganisation of the whole force. Another cause which renders the Militia unpopular both with officers and men is the systematic way in which the force is always kept in the background. The only notice the Militia have lately received from the authorities was in the shape of a scheme ostensibly designed to amalgamate them with the Line, but which, as a matter of fact, is thoroughly distasteful to both services. The Militia do not require nursing, but they do require recognition. There are a great many Militia regiments which can compare very favourably indeed with our boy regiments of the Line, and which might become a most useful recruiting ground, if only soldiering during the annual training were made more popular. But as things stand, the training takes place in some out-of-the-way corner, nobody knows and nobody cares where; none of the glamour and éclat of the soldier's life pertains to the Militia, the men are despised, the duties are humdrum, and there is indeed little to induce a man to enlist, but the bounty which he is glad to take when, at some time or other, he finds himself out of work and in very low water.

The Duke of Edinburgh left Castletown Berehaven on August 11 with the Channel Squadron for Galway.

Admiral Sir Houston Stewart struck his flag on board the Royal Adelaide at Devonport on Monday last, and proceeded on leave of absence; the flag of Rear-Admiral Curme was shifted from the Indus to the Royal Adelaide.

Consequent on the death of Mr. White, Paymaster, Assistant-Paymaster C. Raxworthy, who stands second on the list, receives his promotion.

Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, G.C.B., Senior Naval Lord, on the 11th inst., was by her Majesty's command sworn of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, and took his place at the Board accordingly.

Whilst we are discussing the question of our comparative naval strength, Italy is working steadily at the creation of a most formidable fleet, and the launch of the Ruggiero di Lauria last Saturday at Castellamare adds the fifth to this tremendous marine, the object of which no fellow can understand. The new vessel has a displacement of 10,045 tons, being about 4,000 tons less than the Duilio, and her displacement is about 7 feet less than that of the great ironclad. But the breadth is a trifle greater, and she is about 11 feet shorter. Her armament is to consist of four 100-ton guns, 10 4-ton guns, and 12 large mitrailleux, and a 6-inch gun at the bow and at the stern. Her keel was laid three years ago, and it is estimated that she will cost £800,000. What is to be done with this fleet time alone can show. It certainly adds an element to the uneasiness which is created by the great increase of maritime power on the part of States which seem to have nothing to do with it.

The Admiralty have appointed a committee to enquire into the eleven years' clause affecting Paymasters. This should be pleasing news to the Accountant Branch, at least, such of them as have faith in committees.

While the Russian Admiralty has been lavish of money for shipbuilding lately, retrenchment has been the feature of the literary branch. In 1879 a work was commenced on Russian ironclads, but, after the expenditure of £160, was stopped for want of funds. In 1881 a translation was commenced of "White's Theory of Naval Construction," but never finished. Finally, last year £60 was expended on the introductory part of an "Atlas of Ship Gear." A proposal has now been made that funds shall now be assigned to complete all these works.

The German man-of-war Niobe (training-ship), Captain Schroeder, arrived at Queenstown on the 10th, and will leave again on the 16th for an extended cruise. During her stay at Queenstown, the officers and cadets have been hospitably entertained by Admiral Lethbridge and the officers of H.M.S. Revenge.

Rear-Admiral Tryon will be appointed to the command of the Australian Station on the expiration of Commodore Erskine's period of service in January next.

It is reported this week at St. Petersburg that the Minister of Marine has decided to give an order for gunboats for the Baltic Fleet to the Neva Iron Works Company to the extent of nearly a quarter of a million sterling.

We look forward with interest to see what our amiable contemporary, the Cronstadt Vestnik, will have to say anent the misfortunes of the torpedo cutters in the Gulf of Finland recorded this week. It is only ten days ago that the Vestnik drew attention to a recent collision at Portsmouth, and sneeringly stated that "English officers seemed to be rather clumsy in managing their torpedo boats;" inferring at the same time that that could not be said of the Russian officers of the Baltic fleet. But we now hear by telegraph that the sea-going torpedo boat Vzriff has seriously damaged herself by running into a sailing vessel near Cronstadt, while at Biorkesund, the torpedo boat Pskartas kindly rammed home her confrère, the Svirstrel, and sunk her. These are manœuvres with a vengeance, and if the operations this year are, in the words of Reuter, likely to be "very important, as they are expected to furnish data for the future construction of Russian war vessels," we can only congratulate the Russians on the energy with which they have commenced them.

We are informed that Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney proceeds to Canada to take part in the proceedings of the British Association at Montreal, at the request of the Council, and that he has consented to act as Treasurer during the meeting.

By an Imperial ukaze, the "Russian Squadron in the Mediterranean" has been revived as a designation for the vessels-of-war stationed in the waters of Southern Europe. Since 1876, the designation has been "the Russian Squadron in Grecian waters," the number of men-of-war not being large enough or sufficiently important to justify the more sounding title. For the future—that is to say, from the end of the autumn, when the new Mediterranean Squadron will be formed—Russia will maintain a real squadron in South Europe.

One of the new gunboats of the Baltic Fleet, the Dojd, has been incapacitated for further service during the navigation season by running on a boulder-stone in the Gulf of Finland. The vessel is now in dock at Cronstadt, and a court-martial is to investigate the affair next week. According to accounts received, the cause of the accident would appear to either a defect in the Admiralty charts—the rock not being marked in them—or, as is more generally believed, the shifting of a boulder stone. The whole of the Finno-Russian region is covered with these stones—often a large as a cottage, and in the spring, during the passage of the ice from the Neva to the Baltic, they often get dragged out of position, and now and again find their way into some of the channels of the Gulf of Finland, where they form a fertile source of accidents to the mercantile marine.

In our remarks last week on the invaliding of Major Rose, we inadvertently stated that "he went out with the last reinforcements of Marines to Suakim;" instead of which, Major Rose went out in February last to Suakim, and was in charge for many weeks of the forts Euryalus and Carysfort, at that place.

A serious collision occurred lately in the roadstead of Bjoerkosund between the Russian torpedo-boats Piskar and Sviristet, resulting in the immediate sinking of the former and in considerable damage to the latter craft, but without loss of life.

The manner in which young gentlemen are at present educated for the Marines is open to many serious objections, and, amongst others, that the present system is subversive of that spirit of discipline and subordination which should pervade the junior grades of the Military services. Marine subalterns should be sent to finish their education at Greenwich before joining the head-quarters of their division, and should not first be ordered to go through a short course of Military training and then be sent in batches to kick their heels about at Portsmouth while nominally "at school." They thus get demoralised, as they are under scarcely any restraint whatever, and discipline is only nominally enforced. These young gentlemen only learn to think very much of themselves and very little of their seniors, whom they look down upon as "an uneducated lot," and for whom they have little or no hesitation in openly showing their contempt on every possible occasion. It would be far preferable to send young gentlemen entering the Marines to Greenwich, and to there let them go through a course of instruction that would render them useful officers on board ship.

The appointment of Major Chermside as Civil Governor of Suakim has not, it appears, proved a happy selection, as it has caused such an enormous amount of friction between the naval, military, and marine authorities there stationed that first Admiral Lord John Hay and now Major-General Fremantle have had to be ordered down to the place to set matters right. Commodore Molyneux and Colonel Ozzard, in command of the Marines, have worked well together, owing to the instructions issued by Lord John Hay, thereby keeping the Marines under the immediate orders of Commodore Molyneux; but their position became most anomalous in regard to the military and civil authorities, and had there been any active operations some disaster might have overtaken our arms, owing to the divided responsibility thus created. This will now be at an end, and Major Chermside will be placed in his proper position as Civil Governor, Major-General Fremantle assuming that of Military Governor; and thus all friction will be at an end, and things will move, let us hope, smoothly.

Lieutenant-Colonel S. J. Graham, C.B., of the Plymouth Division, Royal Marines, completed his term in his present rank on the 6th inst., to entitle him to the rank of colonel in the Army, under the provisions of clause 6 of Order in Council, November 29, 1881, and Act 12 of Army Warrant.

The promotion of Lieutenant-Colonel Heriot from the Majors' List, moves Major F. M. Sharp to the higher rate of pay.

The Committee of the Royal Artillery Institution have applied to the Duke of Cambridge for permission to have the reorganisation of their regiment discussed in the prize essay for next year. There can hardly be any doubt that the necessary sanction will be given. His Royal Highness has always shown a desire to promote the efficiency of the distinguished corps of which he is Colonel-in-Chief, and such a discussion as is now proposed would seem to be particularly opportune and deserving of encouragement. As we have before remarked, there is nothing to fear, there is everything to gain from fair, frank, full discussion. The officers of the Army will be ill-advised if they allow themselves to be gagged by the dry dust of official etiquette, which is always being thrown in their eyes. It is distinctly within their province—nay, we venture to think, it is positively their duty—to assist the authorities by offering their advice whenever they consider such advice would be useful. The country looks to the regimental officers to interpret the wishes and opinions of the Army, and if they persist in remaining silent when they ought to speak out, they lay themselves open to the charge of abdicating the high functions which have been entrusted to their care. On more than one occasion that hesitation to speak out has done incalculable mischief. Had a determined and organised stand, instead of mere half-hearted protests, been made by the regimental officers when Mr. Childers first brought forward his proposals, we do not think he would have been rash enough to have carried his schemes over their heads and against their wishes. The Army wishes to stand well with the country, and this can only be effected by the officers showing themselves able, and willing, and strong enough to hold their own when their interests are threatened by the crude reforms of ignorant civilians. It is very creditable to the officers of the Royal Artillery that they should show a desire to reorganise their regiment, and if the discussion which it is sought to raise be confined within reasonable limits and conducted in a fair and temperate spirit, it can hardly fail to be of the utmost help to the authorities, and to materially strengthen their hands when they are called upon to deal with this question—this burning question—of Artillery Reform.

"How not to do it," is being fully exemplified in the new recently formed Artillery Depôts. At one of these, we hear of 380 recruits and 50 trumpeters, with but 50 horses, instead of the establishment of 100 to teach the men, and a couple of bugles for the 50 boys—this seems economy with a vengeance. No adjutant is allowed to any of these four large depôts; though this officer is considered indispensable in the case of the much smaller and less important Infantry Depôts—strange, indeed, is War Office organisation.

The French War Minister has just authorised a captain of the 80th Territorial Regiment to visit the chief towns in France with the view of forming a "National Federation of Dove-Loving Societies," id est, a service of carrier-pigeons. The part which pigeons played in the siege of Paris has not been forgotten in France. At that period, however, there was only time to introduce a few hundred pigeons into the capital, from the Department of the North, and few of these birds were real carriers. It is now asserted that the French War Minister could, if necessary, dispose of 30,000 carriers; the question is now to organise this feathered force. A French military writer points out that in most of the important towns of Germany there is a station of carrier-pigeons, under the orders of the inspector-general of military telegraphs. Each pigeon-house is under the direct authority of the commandant of the place, and is administered by a sub-officer oft engineers, aided by a specialist and two soldiers A most of the stations there are about 200 birds, but we, see that at Metz and Strasburg there are 600. Not only are the birds trained, but a register is carefully kept of the voyages they have accomplished, and the rapidity and reliability of each pigeon is known. In France it has been decided to establish two central establishments, one at Paris and another at Langres, furnished with a sufficient number of birds to keep up a correspondence for six months, Paris communicating with Mezières, Verdun, Toul, and Langres; and Langres with Belfort, Besançon, and Lyons. It is calculated that a pigeon can accomplish the distance which separates these places one from the other, in five hours.

A report is current that when the Duke of Edinburgh resigns the command of the Channel Squadron, he will be nominated to the command of the Mediterranean Fleet, in succession to Admiral Lord John Hay, who returns home in December. It is arranged that the Prince Leiningen is to succeed Vice-Admiral Rice as Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, on October 27; while Rear-Admiral Wilson (late second-in-command of the Channel Squadron), has been selected to succeed Sir William Hewett on the East Indies station.

Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, No. 57.—"The French Artillery Manœuvres at Chalons-sur-Marne."

Whilst the French troops have their regular summer manœuvres every year, operations of special arms on an extended scale are now and then ordered. Thus two years ago there were the great cavalry manœuvres under General Gallifet; last summer mountain operations were carried on; and this year the French artillery manœuvred in large bodies. General Ladvocat was chosen by the War Minister to select a suitable spot in France, and as he was at the same time instructed that no compensation was to be paid for injury done to crops, only two localities remained—one the plateau of Gers, in the Pyrenees, the other the camp of Chalons. If the first spot had been selected, the manœuvres would have entailed heavy additional expense, no arrangements whatever existing at Gers for housing troops. Thus Chalons was finally chosen, in the camp of which, besides two artillery regiments, that of Laon and La Fère, hold their annual exercises. The two regiments of the 6th Artillery Brigade, garrisoned at Chalons, and the four horse batteries of the independent cavalry brigades of Luneville and Nancy, were added. These four regiments and eight batteries were placed on July 1 under the orders of General de Lajaille, the President of the Artillery Committee of the French War Office. The General had to instruct these masses according to the new forms of the Artillery Regulations, and to direct the fire of such large masses of artillery, as in actual war. All the batteries were equipped ready for the march, with all the trains and carriages used in the field. The manœuvres took place between the villages of Mourmelon le Petit and Le Grand. The regiments and detachments from La Fère, Laon, Luneville, and Nancy bivouacked under tents on the polygon of Chalons; the regiments garrisoned in the town marched every morning to the field. The polygon of Chalons is especially suitable for the movement of large masses. The heights and hills form small chains, and their slope is so gradual as to permit of guns being placed behind the heights and distributed to the fullest extent possible. The regulation exercises took up the days from July 1 to 3. It was the first time that French artillery manœuvred in such masses; and, according to the writer (Lieutenant O. Elster, late of the German Army), they did their work well. Every movement was executed with the greatest precision and rapidity. One could see that the operations carried on were real practice, and that the several commanders knew what they were about. The guns were well horsed; the harness, however, was heavier than it is, for example, in the German artillery—a circumstance which, it is said, was also noticed by General de Lajaille. If it is considered that rapidity of movement depends upon the load carried by the horses, and from this rapidity the loss of a battery is greater or smaller in an action, the remark will not be looked upon as superfluous. Firing with ball cartridge was practised from July 4 to 6, against large wooden targets. The idea was that an army corps, advancing, encounters a strong enemy. The artillery opened the action with their fire, under the protection of which the infantry deploys. The action is carried on at varying distances; gradually all the batteries of the army corps came into action, and finally concentrate their fire upon the point in the enemy's position selected for the attack of the infantry. The troops entered into action in the following manner:—The eight-horse batteries, under the command of a colonel, led the attack; the eight batteries (two-horse batteries) of the corps of artillery followed as reserves. The Commander-in-Chief, having taken up his position on a height between those two lines, distributed the batteries according as targets offered themselves. Those targets consisted during the first three days of wooden hoardings 1 mètre wide and 1·6 mètre high. Four of those hoardings represented a battalion, and batteries were also indicated by hoardings. Those targets were placed in sheltered positions behind heights. During the last day of the manœuvres (July 7) the enemy's position was marked by petards, which exploded one after the other, so that the batteries could take as an aim only a line of smoke and dense clouds of smoke. Shells were fired at long distances; shrapnels were used for shorter ones. When batteries could not take up positions in line, guns in the rear employed indirect firing. Altogether, 96 guns came into action. The author was unable to obtain correct information on the results obtained. He dared not show that he was an interested spectator, as a large number of persons were present at the manœuvres who would have been glad of the opportunity of according to a "Prussien" the treatment of a spy. But there would have been not the least molestation on the part of the troops or the better class of civilians present. The author states finally that the general impression produced upon him by the manœuvres and the bearing of the troops was a very good one. He believes that, by what he has seen of the other arms of the French, the artillery are the best. If we take into account the well-known national characteristics of the Frenchman, which render the precise manœuvring of the Germans impossible, or at least extremely difficult, the bearing and the performances of the French troops are deserving of all praise. There is no doubt that a Frenchman is a born soldier.

Jahrbücher für die deutsche Armee und Marine, No 155.—The August number contains the conclusion of a lengthy article on the French Tonquin expedition, to which we have referred on previous occasions. The writer sums up as follows:—"The advantages of the Treaty of Tien-tsin are all on the French side. The French protectorate over Tonquin and Annam is recognised, and three border provinces of the Chinese Empire are opened to trade by treaty. At present, only surmises can be made as to the reasons which induced China to yield so suddenly. Did China see that she could not seriously oppose France, and did she believe that a continuance of the present situation would lead France still further, and impose finally still heavier sacrifices upon China? We scarcely think so. The silly cries, 'à Pekin,' which after the capture of Bac-ninh were more audible on the Paris boulevards than in the expeditionary corps, frightened China a little. But it is more probable that China felt herself forsaken by England, who was too deeply immersed in the Egyptian muddle to have time to think of the Tonquin question. Even after the capture of Sontay, France had decidedly repelled English intervention, how much more now, when France can point to the successes of her arms, and England's prestige has fallen so low through the Egyptian question. However that may be, the sudden abandonment on the part of China of claims regarding Annam and Tonquin which had been maintained all along with so much tenacity, became a triumph for the Ferry Government, and imparted to the expedition, quite unexpectedly, a rapid and favourable issue. Notwithstanding all the political and military errors committed, and which have been pointed out in this paper, success was on the side of France, and it almost appears as if, with the annexation of Tonquin,—this is the proper name for the French "protectorate"—the foundation were laid for a French colonial empire in India, and thus the favourite dream of French colonial policy approaching its realisation. Let us now summarise the immediate consequences of the seizure of Tonquin. The military occupation of the principal strongholds of the delta—Hanoi, with the protecting flanking position of Bac-ninh and Hai-dzuong, and Nam-dinh with Phu-Ly and Ninh-binh—by itself will not be permanently sufficient. In order to effectually protect in Tonquin the inhabited and cultivated portion of the delta, it will be imperative to occupy, at a sufficient distance from that zone, those few points situate in the almost uninhabited forests between French and Chinese possessions, which command the lines of communication. Sooner or later the occupation of Lang-son, Cao-bang, and Lao-kai will force itself upon the French as a measure of pacification and a defensive policy. The neutral zone, always claimed by China, between her frontier provinces and Tonquin, has been placed by nature herself between these boundaries. The places named form the keys to the Chinese provinces, and it would be extremely naïve on the part of the French if they did not, after their former experience of the mandarins of the Celestial Empire, reserve to themselves those keys. A look at the map is sufficient to indicate the extent of the district to be occupied (Lang-son and Cao-bang are distant from Bac-ninh about 60 miles; Lao-kai from Hanoi nearly 145 miles), and to enable us to form an estimate of the forces necessary for an effectual occupation of those remote points. But it is just this what China wants, and the Marquis Tseng no doubt hinted at the time at those difficulties when he spoke of the futility of even a long struggle for Northern and North-Eastern Tonquin. If French occupation has once so far advanced, the sly opponent has obtained a negative result in the weakening of the child. The condition of helplessness of a foreign army operating in such an extensive territory, as compared with an enemy who is never and nowhere fettered in his dispositions of retreat, will then become all the more prominent. Nothing will hinder the Chinese from repeating their former game in those districts covered by impenetrable forests and swamps. (Since those lines were written, the Lang-son incident has happened.) A very similar condition existed at the time in Algeria, where the war of occupation lasted for nearly two decades. And yet the Kabyles and Arabs were not backed up by a great power, such as the Chinese partisans are who are fighting the French in Tonquin. Those difficulties form the weak part—the open wound of French successes. To overcome them, the creation, in the first place, of a strong native contingent will have to be taken in hand, for the French marines, notwithstanding the impending increase, are not equal to the demand made upon them. A further problem of the occupation will be the organisation, on a firm basis, of the most important branches of the administration, for the solution of which we might wish the French more aptitude than they have shown elsewhere in Algeria. There is a talk at present of the appointment of a Minister resident at Hué, and of a military governor at Hanoi, Admiral Courbet being mentioned for the latter post. If, finally, the French press indulge in the hope that the budget of Tonquin will show in two years receipts to the extent of 100 million francs, this view appears to us somewhat sanguine. The experiences gained in Cochin-China do not warrant such a presumption."

"MICROBE OR MONSTER."

There is a very lively contest going on in France between microbe and monster, or between the advocates of huge ironclads and torpedo-boats. The Débats takes one side, the Temps the other. The latter journal says that M. Charmes, in the former, demands nothing less than the demolition of the ironclads at present on the stocks, and that the money they would absorb should be spent in the construction of sea-going torpedoes of a ship-gun type. The Temps, which is not so enthusiastic an admirer of the torpedo, reminds us of the great reputation enjoyed by the mitrailleuse before it was tried in 1870 in actual warfare. It admits that the torpedo is a formiderable invention, which may be brought to a still higher state of perfection than it has reached at present, but, in spite of the recent trials in the Mediterranean, it cannot recommend the Government to follow the advice of the Débats. In the Mediterranean the French fleet discovered some torpedo-boats, when they were 1,000 mètres off, at night by means of the electric light, and as both were under steam, moving in opposite directions, the torpedo-boats, had the attack been a real one, would have encountered the ironclads two-and-a-half minutes after having been sighted. This attack was expected and in fact planned beforehand. The advocates of the torpedo-boat ask, if such an attack end-on had been made unexpectedly by an enemy, would the fleet have had time to defend itself, would it not have been destroyed? The reply of the Temps is that a fleet will in future move like an army preceded by scouts, and that the torpedo-boats of the enemy would have first to encounter other torpedo-boats before reaching their victims. The Temps then writes:—"As long as ironclads alone are opposed to torpedoes, the microbe will kill the monster. Besides the risks would not be the same for a nation which should send to sea a fleet of ironclads to which the enemy would oppose five times the number of torpedo-boats. Six ironclads like the Amiral Duperré and the Dévastation cost at least 100 millions (£4,000,000). Thirty torpedo-boats of 50-tons cost less than ten millions. Again, it takes several years to construct an ironclad, whereas a torpedo-boat may be built in a few months." With all this, the Temps cannot agree with M. Charmes that the torpedo-boat should entirely supersede the ironclad. This is how M. Charmes writes:—"The Amiral Duperré, the finest ironclad in the fleet, the latest type of fighting-vessel floated, disposes, by way of offensive power, of four Whitehead torpedoes, and can fire a broadside of about 1,400 kilos of iron. But the Amiral Duperré cost £1,000,000. Suppose this money to be laid out in torpedo-boats, we should have—1st, 25 torpedo-boats, at £8,000 each, £200,000, and 50 torpedoes; 2nd, 20 "ship-guns," at £4,000 each, armed with two heavy guns, throwing in all a broadside of 1,200 kilos. The difference in the weight of metal thrown would be insignificant, and instead of four torpedoes of almost illusory utility, we should have 50 torpedoes, whose action might be decisive." The Temps has no confidence in the "ship-gun" advocated by M. Charmes, especially as a siege craft, asking of what utility such microbes would be in presence of the 100-ton guns of Malta and Gibraltar, the 80-ton guns at Dover, or even 70 or 50-ton guns? The "ship-gun," with its 14 c. piece, would be harmless against a modern ironclad. The Temps calls in question the figures of M. Charmes. It says that the Amiral Duperré did not cost 25 million francs, but 16 millions, and that the "ship-guns" which he advocates, and which are to steam 22 knots, could not be constructed for one million francs each. The writer then observes,—"With the 'infinitely small' fleet of M. Charmes, at the moment of attack the ironclads would simply have to protect themselves with their nets,—nets which are now being studied in France,—and the torpedo would expire powerless in its meshes, as has been proved in all the trials yet made." M. Charmes, who seldom loses an opportunity of displaying hostility towards England, refuses to take into consideration the experiments in Bantry Bay. He prefers going to Germany, and what does he see there? That Germany is building 70 torpedo-boats. It is this which has inflamed his imagination. The Temps asks M. Charmes why he did not quote more of the German document presented to the Reichstag; why he stopped short at the demand for money to build 70 torpedo-boats? Why did he not quote such passages as these:—"No European Power has yet dared to do without ironclads or even to diminish their number. . . . . . The torpedo, so efficacious for coast defences, remains a secondary arm for engagements on the high seas. . . . . . Although Germany considers that her army will long support her greatness, she is forced to have a powerful marine, and the Admiralty is of opinion that it cannot renounce ironclads. . . . . . It is not certain that it is preferable to construct ironclad corvettes and gunboats to large ships; it will be well to await the results of experiments before deciding in favour of either type." The Débats, replying to the Temps quotes the opinion of Captain Gougeard, who was Minister of Marine under M. Gambetta, and who some time ago wrote a pamphlet in which he condemned ironclads in favour of vessels of smaller dimensions, &c. He wrote, "We must escape at any price from this absurd and impossible fix, this nightmare without a name, where 500 men and twenty million francs are put into one scale, and ten men and 200,000 francs into the other." According to the calculations of Captain Gougeard it would require over £5,000,000 to complete the large ironclads in hand, which, in his opinion, would never serve any purpose. "And to think," exclaims the Débats, "that in spite of the state of our finances, the resources of the budget are being swallowed up in this ruinous and sterile work!" And the writer concludes by calling for decisive experiments to show upon which side the truth lies.

The Right Sort. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. Illustrated by Edgar Giborne. (Chapman and Hall.)

This "hunting" novel, which Mr. Hawley Smart would no doubt pronounce to be of "the right sort," opens with a lively dissertation on hunting in general and with "the Crichley" in particular, which is sustained by Miss Kate Brewser, an enthusiast in all matters connected with the hunting field, and her friend and companion, Miss Mary Whitbread, "a gentle, fair-haired, low-voiced girl," of about eight and twenty, who evidently entertains very different ideas on the subject. The matter immediately under consideration is whether a certain well-known hunting-box, named Sport Lodge, was likely, from the description given of it in the papers, to prove a satisfactory place of residence for these young ladies. While waiting the result of a letter written by the agent for the sale of Sport Lodge, we may be permitted to ascertain some particulars as to Kate Brewser's antecedents. Kate Brewser was an heiress, "a good, solid, bonâ fide heiress," possessing £7,000 a year in Consols, which came to her by the death of her uncle, a man of determined energy, whereby he acquired this large fortune; her parents had died in her infancy, and she was adopted by her colonial uncle, who immediately returned to England. The household consisted of Mr. Brewser's nephew and reputed heir, Herbert Monro, who was about five years' Kate's senior. He was a harmless milksop, while she inherited the disposition of her uncle, whom she almost worshipped. When Kate was in her seventeenth year he died, and she became entitled to the princely fortune bequeathed to her. The descriptions given by the authoress of the death of Campbell Brewser, and the curious circumstances that immediately preceded that event, are written with considerable effect. It appears that Kate's uncle, when dying, forced her and Monro to pledge themselves to become married within six months, or otherwise forfeit all claim to his property. This the latter received with evident reluctance, but finally yielded, and subscribed the deed. Time pressed swiftly on, and at length the fatal day arrived. Kate bore the trial without a murmur, great as was the sacrifice. All was ready for the ceremony to proceed when one of those mysterious but welcome telegrams, which are such favourites with novelists, suddenly arrived. It was short, sweet, and decided. "Forgive me, Kate," it said, "I have deceived you cruelly. There can be no marriage between us, for I was married this morning to another." Here was a sudden transformation scene, and Kate, true to her character, comprehended the situation in a moment, then quietly knelt down, and returned thanks for her restored liberty. Shortly after Mary Whitbread came to reside with her, an arrangement that looked like and proved to be a perfect success. Such is a slight sketch of the heroine and her friend when about to go into possession of Sport Lodge. Those who can afford time and space in accompanying the author in her strange and exciting adventures will feel themselves amply remunerated. Her descriptive power is considerable, and although there is an abundance of sensational matter introduced, it is done with considerable tact and careful consideration. Altogether, Mrs. Kennard's Romance of the Shires deserves no little commendation.

The History of the late 63*rd* (West Suffolk Regiment). By Major James Slack.

It is always desirable to procure authentic records of the services rendered by some particular regiment and to have them properly prepared to lay before the public. A certain amount of interest can scarcely fail to attach itself to the records of every regiment in the service, and it may be that the author of this work held that opinion when he thought of stringing together what at first seems to be merely a collection of extracts which, in some respects, are meagre and even inaccurate. Even though this be the case, it should be remembered that it is the work of a gallant and worthy old soldier who has the interests of the late 63rd regiment at heart, and who is endeavouring to perpetuate the fame of one of the regiments which have disappeared in the jumble of reorganisation. There is another thing which should be taken into consideration when discussing Major Slack's book. It is the well arranged manner in which he details many of the interesting episodes which occurred during the author's Crimean services. No small amount of care has been expended on the preparation of this record.

Regimental Records of the Bedfordshire Militia from 1759 to 1884. By Lieut.-Col. Sir John Burgoyne. (W. H. Allen.)—This work records the services of a gallant militia regiment. As a compilation it deserves very favourable notice.

NAVAL ORDNANCE.

The comparison we made not long ago between the bursting charge of the shell of the 64-pounder and that of the shell of the French gun has led several Naval officers to believe that we upheld the obsolete 64-pounder. We merely alluded to Captain Johnstone's statement at the Royal United Service Institution that he had not the slightest doubt but that, with his guns throwing shells with 6 lb. of powder as bursting charges, he could have rendered a good account of any of the French ships, with their guns throwing shell exploded by only 2 lb. of powder. An officer who is not at all anxious to overstate the case "is glad to find that some people see more virtue than he does in the 64-pounders." On this subject our esteemed correspondent writes:—

"In my experience they are very indifferent guns; the shot frequently jamb, and neither in range nor accuracy have they much to boast of. The bursting-charge is 4·8 lb. for some common shell—the newer guns, I believe, but am not sure—7 lb. in others; so that the 6-lb. bursting-charge is not far from correct. I do not know the bursting charges for the guns in similar French ships to the Dryad, but I do know that our 64-pounders are being superseded by breech-loading guns, bearing a curious resemblance in point of armament to those now in French ships of the Dryad class. A French authority now before me gives as the armament of the Decrès, a French sloop of 1,616 tons, one gun, 16 centimètres = 5½ in.; nine guns, 14 centimètres = 5in. If I turn to the armament of the Pylades, of 1,420 tons, building, I find that she is to carry two 6-in. and ten 5-in. guns. The Canada now has six 6-in. and twelve 5-in. guns, all new patterns: 64-pounders, then, are obsolete, and as I see no special virtue in them, I am very glad. Practically, the fact is that we are copying the French in guns as in ships, though no doubt our new guns are much superior to the French old ones; but we are adopting their system and endeavouring to improve on it, though, as far as I can hear, our Woolwich guns have not been as good as those made by Armstrong. The obsolete 64-pounder has the advantage over a modern gun, Vavasseur, &c., that a carronade had over a long 18 in old days; but that is all."

NAVAL DISCIPLINE ACT, 1884.

The following notification appears in last night's London Gazette:—"Whereas by Section 9 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1884 (47 and 48 Victoria, chapter 39), the Admiralty are empowered to fix the dates at which the said Act shall come into force on the several Naval stations. Now, therefore, we, being two of the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of Great Britain and Ireland, do hereby give notice and declare that the said Act shall come into force:—In the United Kingdom and on the Home Stations, from Sept. 1, 1884. On the Mediterranean Station, from Sept. 15, 1884. On the North-American and West Indies Station, and on the South-east Coast of America Station, from Nov. 1, 1884. On all other Naval Stations, from Dec. 1, 1884. Given under our hands and the seal of the office of the Admiralty, this 14th day of August, 1884.

SENIOR MAJORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Having observed several letters in your paper lately regarding the employment of senior majors, I would suggest that steps be taken immediately for reinstating them in their proper position. The present system of allowing them to perform the duties of subalterns has a tendency to lower discipline in the British Army. For a subaltern to be on the same roster for duty with a field officer is lowering the prestige of the latter in the eyes of the non-commissioned officers and men, and causes the former to think more of his importance than he should do, and does not inculcate habits of obedience and discipline so necessary in the training of a young officer. That the senior field officers have done it loyally for so long, proves the school they were brought up in as subalterns was a good one. In the interest of the Service, it should now cease. I would recommend that the two senior majors in a battalion take charge of their half battalions under the commanding officer as heretofore. The two juniors who, it is presumed, will nearly always be on the lower rate of pay (the same as that received by the old brevet majors) performing regimental duties as captains, but on no account to be placed on the same roster as subalterns. The second lieutenant-colonel of the home battalion should be sent to the depôt to command it, and superintend the recruiting in the district, instead of the colonels who now do so, who should be employed in looking after the drills and discipline of the Reserve Forces,—not merely formally inspecting them once a year, but attend their battalion and brigade drills, and see they are properly conducted. This plan will involve two more captains in each battalion; but as the subaltern of the present day is always at schools of instruction, and the non-commissioned officers are boys, it is absolutely necessary, if regiments are to exist in anything but name, the second lieutenant-colonel of the foreign battalion should be with his regiment. Trusting this idea may be adopted, I am, &c., One Hoping for Better Days.

An Admiralty Circular directs that students in naval construction (dockyard shipwright apprentices) who during the vacation at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, are attached to the dockyards, are to receive the same allowances as acting assistant-engineers,—viz., 6s. per day, and 1s. 6d. per day towards mess expenses, during the first session; afterwards they will receive 7s. 6d. per day and 1s. 6d. for mess expenses, which latter allowance will not be payable when the students are at their own yards. The students are to wear uniform, and the pay mentioned is to cover the expense of it.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.

One of those distressing cases which occur from time to time in India happened the other day at Subathu. On Wednesday, July 9, a private in the 2nd Queen's, of the name of Rawlinson or Rollinson, apparently in a fit of despondency, took his rifle and ammunition, and, before he was secured, shot two of his comrades dead, wounded a corporal and three men slightly, and was only overpowered after he had been wounded himself by the gymnastic instructor. He will probably recover and be brought to trial by the civil authorities, as in the case of the man Day, of the Dorsetshire Regiment (54th), who was hanged in Lahore at the beginning of the year for the murder of a comrade. Rollinson is an old soldier, and has 27 years' service, so that in his case the sudden outbreak is the more curious, and it becomes more probable that he will be proved insane.

There is a new regulation just published which in a small way tends to lessen the advantages of becoming a warrant officer—viz., the privilege of having their letters franked has been taken away from them. When the rank was first granted to the serjeant-majors of regiments they even tried to stop the free issue of rations. There have been a few personal appointments in the past week. Deputy-Surgeon-General G. S. Brown has been appointed to the Presidency District, Major Rogers, of the 4th Goorkhas, succeeds Major Hill as D.A.A.G. for Musketry, and Captain Hatch, of the 2nd Wilts (late 99th), becomes Station Staff Officer at Murree, vice Routh, appointed Brigade Major at Rawul Pindee. One of the Calcutta papers announces that Lieutenant-Colonel Hallowes, of the East Yorkshire Regiment (15th), has been appointed Commandant of the Deolali Depôt. This appointment is the only one of its sort which involves the occupant's being seconded, and it also counts as equivalent to the command of a regiment. If Colonel Hallowes accepts it, it will give a vacancy for a Lieutenant-Colonel in his regiment.

For some time past there has been discussion about the system of providing remounts for regiments of native cavalry. At present the horses are bought for the men by the officers of the regiment, under regimental arrangements. An officer with a party of the regiment attends at some horse fair, or at all of them, and picks up any horses he can. In most ways the system works very well, but of late there have been complaints that the competition is more favourable to the dealers than to the purchasers, and that horses year by year become more difficult to purchase for the price the regiments can afford to give. Nothing has been done as yet, but some of those concerned propose a sort of agreement to do away with the competition, and it really seems that it will be necessary to do something. The Afghan War first of all, and latterly mule-breeding, which the Zamindars find much more profitable than breeding horses or ponies, has run up the price of horseflesh in India considerably.

The council of the N.I.R.A. have just been occupied with another shooting scandal. It is, of course, impossible to hold a meeting like Wimbledon in India, owing to the distances to be traversed and the expense. The Rifle Association therefore have to depend upon the honesty and good feeling of the competitors in out stations, and unfortunately, in spite of every precaution, this is not always reliable. A case has just occurred at a small station among some members of the third Punjab V.R.C., and as the council rejected their claims to prizes on the ground of doubtful practices, the colonel of the regiment called for an inquiry. It appears, however, that it has been decided that only one man was to blame, and he having been disqualified, &c., the matter has been closed. It is said that shooting passes are in future not to be issued to British soldiers. The question is a very difficult one in many ways, because there is not a doubt that, while on the one hand, soldiers are constantly getting into difficulties with the natives, on the other, it would be a great mistake to restrict in any way Tommy Atkins' amusements. As a matter of fact, recent instances have gone to prove that half the so-called "shooting affrays" have been provoked by the natives themselves, either from a growing spirit of aggressiveness or in the hope of extorting money from the soldiers. The civil authorities, unfortunately, are apt to take a harsh view of Tommy Atkins' dealing with the natives, and as he knows it, he will very often part with his money sooner than run the risk of being charged with a number of assaults, &c., which he never committed very probably, but which in view of a mass of evidence he finds it difficult or impossible to disprove.

They are slightly modifying the old plan of arming the villages on the Peshawur Frontier, by organising a sort of local militia to defend the villages against the attacks of the tribes. It is too early yet to say how the scheme is working, but it is satisfactory to note it is costing less money than was expected. The details for the Zhob Valley Expedition has just been published. It is as follows :—"From Quettah, under command of Sir O. Tanner, 4 guns, 9-1 (Northern), R.A., 150 men, 1st Bombay Lancers, the 98th Regiment, 45th Rattray's Sikhs, and 2nd Bombay Grenadiers, 250 Madras Pioneers, 75 Sappers. These proceed by Kowas to Thule, where they will be joined by 2 guns, No. 1 Mounted Battery, 150 of the 10th Bengal Lancers, 150 5th Punjab Cavalry, and 250 of the 3rd Native Light Infantry (Bombay). From the frontier, force to move across the Indus under command of General Kennedy. No. 4 Mounted Battery, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, 1st and 4th Sikhs, and 1st Punjab Infantry. The Quettah column move about the middle of September. General Kennedy is the senior officer of the whole force. He has commanded the Frontier Force since September, 1880, and last year he commanded the expedition to the Takt-a-Suleiman.

NATIONAL ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION.

One of the most satisfactory meetings ever held under the auspices of this Association is now in full swing; the iron hand of discipline has yet a firmer grip than heretofore, and great care is taken that the easy access to Southend now obtainable through the continuation of the line to this spot shall not cause any breaches of the regulations which the Commandant makes for the orderly conduct of the camp. Lieutenant-Colonel Lewes, R.A., has again been appointed to command; and of the Staff appointments approved by the War Office, it is only necessary to mention those of Lieutenant-Colonel Barnett, 1st Kent (Blackheath), as Brigade-Major, and Captain E. N. Edwards, of the 1st Sussex, as Camp-Adjutant; in the hands of these two tried officers the well-being of the camp is assured. We may add that Surgeon-Major Bourns is chief of the Medical Staff, and that under his care the health of all has been good. The division in camp this week is that known as the Southern, and it includes representatives from the 2nd and 3rd Middlesex, 1st London, 1st Kent (Blackheath, Gravesend, &c.), 1st Hampshire, 1st Gloucester, 1st Cinque Ports (Dover, Sandwich, Hastings, and Folkestone), 1st Sussex (Eastbourne and Brighton), 2nd Kent (Plumstead), 1st Cornwall, 1st Cheshire and Carnarvon, 1st Essex (Stratford and Grays), and one Northern corps, the 4th Durham. Taking them altogether, they are as fine samples of Volunteers as could be met with, and by the time they have finished their brief training, they will go back to their comrades ready to impart the discipline they have themselves been subject to. On Sunday, divine service was held under the auspices of the Rev. Mr. Boddy (Chaplain to the Marquis of Londonderry), in the men's large mess-tent, and his exhortation was attentively listened to. Immediately after, the camp was, as usual, inspected by Colonel Fox-Strangways, R.A., Commandant of the School of Gunnery. An early start was made on Monday morning, and the work done so far has, with one exception, been good. The first competition was with the 64-pounder (Palliser converted), firing shell at 1,900 yards range, and although the first prize was won with the highest possible score (48), and the other winners of prizes, of which there were five, all scored fairly well from this point, the practice deteriorated, and no less than 45 out of 91 detachments failed to gain a point; this is exceptionally bad, but is to be accounted for by the fact that there was some misconception on the part of the No. 1's as to where the target was placed. In the 40-pounder competition, at 1,700 yards, on Tuesday, the practice improved considerably, and the fact that only 14 out of 91 detachments failed to score proves that it must have been above the average; for rapidity in firing, combined with accuracy, the performance of some detachments has seldom been equalled, four rounds in 3 minutes and 27 seconds, making three direct hits, being an extraordinary performance. This time was beaten in two instances in Wednesday's competition, also with the 40-pounder, but at 2,000 yards, one detachment scoring 30 in 3 minutes 20 seconds, and another 24 points (2 directs) in 3 minutes 15 seconds. The principal prizes so far have been won by 2nd and 3rd Middlesex; 1st Kent (Gravesend); 2nd Kent (Plumstead); 1st Gloucester; and 1st Cinque Ports (Folkestone); and the 2nd Middlesex stands first in the aggregate for the Queen's Prize, with a score of 81. The repository shift performed this week has been an ugly one to do, and most of the detachments failed at the point where a man well grounded in elementary work would have been equal to the occasion; two detachments of the 2nd Middlesex got sufficient points for drill and time to bring them in first and third, and a Brighton detachment obtained second honours. The awkward part of the shift consisted in cutting a gun through a passage six feet wide and nine feet long, and it was here that all who failed to score enough points to win came to grief. Throughout the week Colonel Fox-Strangways has kept a watchful eye on the men placed temporarily under his command, and may be expected to find many faults, though, in most instances, the doings of the Volunteer artisans will call for praise; at all events, the Commandant is not the man to hesitate in condemning bad practices if he discovers their existence; his Report to the War Office last year after the meeting was very practical, and it is to be hoped that this year it will be no less favourable.

The Poonah, hired transport, has arrived at Portsmouth. She will convey the 1st Batn. Scottish Rifles to Glasgow, and will return to the Solent with the 2nd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, which will be landed at Cowes and be stationed at Parkhurst.

THE VOLUNTEERS IN CAMP AT ALDERSHOT.

The determination of the military authorities to have all the Volunteer detachments in camp at one time this year resulted in a large addition to the troops last Saturday, when more than 5,000 Volunteers arrived from various parts, but principally from the metropolis, to be formed into eight battalions, and occupied camps at Rushmoor and in the North Camp. Two of the battalions were "consolidated," i.e., composed solely of the men of one regiment. These were the 2nd Wilts, from Chippenham, and the 1st Gloucester, from Bristol; and there can be no question that this is the best manner in which Volunteers can attend at Aldershot or anywhere for a week's training, especially in the case of such a corps as the Wilts, which is in reality what used to be an administrative battalion, with few opportunities of assembling for anything beyond very small battalion drill. The other battalions were all made up of detachments from different corps. Perhaps the most compact looking of the whole of these was that on Rushmoor Hill, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Tufnell, and made up entirely of men from three of the four battalions of the Essex Volunteers. Then Colonel Du Plat Taylor had a very good regiment, to which the always smart Post-Office men contributed over 500, the whole strength being brought up to over 700 by contingents from the London Irish and Civil Service. The Post-Office men are about as hardy a lot of Volunteers as can be found, and in the Camp not only did they preserve their old form, but a new departure was made. Since last year the Colonel—whose idea, it will be remembered, was to form the Army Postal Corps which did its first service in Egypt—has received official sanction to form the Army Telegraph Corps from his men who are telegraphists in civil life, and these men now are regularly enrolled in the Army Reserve. Colonel Taylor brought them under the notice of the senior Royal Engineer officer in Camp, with the result that they have had some important training in field telegraph work, particularly in company with some of the Royal Engineers, and with a field-waggon on the Farnham Road. The Artists have proved themselves a valuable element in the heterogenous battalion Colonel Munro has commanded, made up, as it was, of companies from half-a-dozen Middlesex corps, with some from the 2nd Tower Hamlets and the 1st Herts. This was, indeed, the most variegated battalion of the lot, the uniforms going from the lightest to the darkest of grey. It is somewhat remarkable that, now that scarlet is becoming so generally the garb of infantry Volunteers—to the extent that more than half of them wear it—at Aldershot only two out of the eight were scarlet battalions. One of these lay on Rushmoor Hill, under Colonel Routledge, of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion, Royal Fusiliers, whose corps constituted the greater part of the strength, with additions from the 1st Volunteer Battalion and other corps. The other scarlet battalion was made up of men from Bedfordshire, Hants, and Lancashire. A very good battalion was that on Swan Inn Plateau, where Colonel Alt, of the Central London Rangers, had a mixed force of Middlesex and Surrey men, all in green, with the addition of the Nordenfelt machine-guns, of which a good deal has been said and written at different times. The Victorias, a company of whom were included in this battalion, had with them a few mounted men, so that, from a professional point of view, more interest centred in Colonel Alt's battalion than any other, and much notice was taken both of the machine-guns and the mounted infantry. The latter ride just as before, in the ordinary uniform of the corps, and leggings, and with the short Snider (the same as carried by the rest of the corps) slung en cosaque at the back. The weather was very trying in the earlier days, and the men at drill found their clothing by no means suitable for August weather at Aldershot. The course of instruction was progressive, from company drill on Monday morning—the first working parade—through battalion attack and skirmishing and brigade, to the culminating field-day in the early morning of yesterday, for which all the available troops in Camp were in line by 7. The conduct of the Volunteers has been generally allowed to be very good all round, although there have been one or two cases of insubordination, as must be the case where five thousand men are brought together. There is always a very perceptible difference of tone about the Volunteers directly they get into Aldershot, and feel on their mettle beside Regular troops, a difference which shows of what the Volunteer Force, with a brief spell of training, is capable.

A fatal accident occurred in Portsmouth Dockyard on Tuesday morning to a labourer named William Woods, who at the time was employed upon the extension of the Sheers Jetty. A steam crane is used in connection with the work for the purpose of driving piles, and it is supposed that the rush of the tide caused the fall to slip from its place and to bring the powerful derrick down with great violence. Part of the timber fell upon the deceased, and he was killed instantly.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Pioneer says:—" Some important changes have been lately made in the Artillery commands in this country. Three of the Lieut.-Cols. placed upon an unemployed list, after having completed their five years in that rank, have been nominated for the higher commands formerly held by full Cols. in the 'Royal Regiment,' a rank which was abolished in 1881. These three officers are Lieut.-Cols. Woodward, Taylor, and McCausland, and they will be posted to Lahore, the Presidency, and Aden respectively. This will send Lieut.-Col. Smithett back to Jubbulpore from the Presidency, and Lieut.-Col. Wilson to Campbellpore from Lahore; Lieut.-Col. Sadleir, commanding at Jubbulpore, will be posted to Meerut."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major Tickell (late Bengal) died at Jhansi on July 10, aged 43 years. The deceased obtained his first commission from Addiscombe in Dec. 1859, and was promoted major July 1, 1881. He served under Gen. Roberts in the march to Candahar, and was present at the reconnaissance of Aug. 31, and at the battle of Candahar (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and bronze decoration).

Orders have been received at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, directing Capt. Banklie, Lieuts. Roper, Leahy, and Luard to be in readiness to embark for Egypt about the 20th inst.

The Times of India has the following:—" Major Clarke, of the Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, has been appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the line, and with a subaltern and several men of the corps who have had a mechanical training, is now at Suez awaiting passage to Suakim. The selection of this officer has been made by Sir Andrew Clarke on account of his long experience in India in connection with railways; and it will be remembered that he earned a reputation on the Calcutta lines and also in Sind with the Indus Valley Railway." (The railway from Suakim to Berber has since been abandoned).

The arrangements connected with the new scheme for the reorganisation of the submarine mining companies of the Royal Engineers and their formation into a separate battalion are now being carried out at the School of Military Engineering, Brompton. Major R. H. Vetch will command the battalion, with Lieut. C. V. Wingfield-Stratford as Adjutant.

Lieut.-Col. Bindon Blood has been appointed commandant of the Provisional Batn. of Volunteer Engineers intended to be formed at Chatham to-day. The camp will be broken up on the 30th inst.

Grenadier Guards. Qrmr.-Serjt. John Brook, late of the 1st Batn., died at his residence, No. 10 Stratford Grove, Putney, on the 12th inst. The deceased veteran, a native of Elland, Yorkshire, was born in 1797, and entered the 1st Foot Guards at Halifax in 1813. He went out with the Army to Holland, and served through the campaigns of 1813-14-15, was present in the action of Merxem, the bombardment of Antwerp, and the battles of Quatre Bras and Waterloo. In the last engagement his knapsack was shot from his back by a cannon ball, which killed several comrades close to him. He was present at the funeral of George IV., the coronation and funeral of William IV., and the coronation of Queen Victoria. After over 27 years of service with the Guards he applied for his discharge, and received the medal for long service and good conduct. On the memorable 10th of April, 1848, he had the charge of five divisions of special constables under Viscount Chelsea. In 1851, through the influence of the Duke of Buccleuch, he was appointed a Yeoman of Her Majesty's Royal Body Guard, in which capacity he was present on many state ceremonies, including the marriages of the Princess Royal and the Prince of Wales.

6th Warwickshire Regiment. Orders were received on Wednesday directing the officers and men composing the draft of the 1st Batn. of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment selected to proceed to India to embark at Portsmouth, in the troopship Malabar, on Sept. 10. The detachment will consist of 144 non-commissioned officers and privates, with Major J. R. Gibbs, Capt. F. Longbourne, and Lieut. V. S. Munythe.

13th Light Infantry. Col. Montgomery, lately commanding the Taunton District, died suddenly at Taunton on Saturday last. The deceased, who was in his 58th year, entered the 13th as ensign in Sept. 1847, and served with the regiment in the Crimea Campaign, including the battle of the Tchernaya and siege of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He was promoted lieut.-col. in April, 1873, col., April, 1878, and left the 13th in the latter year. When in South Africa, he acted as commandant in Natal and in the Transvaal.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. We regret to have to announce the death of Hon. Capt. and Qrmr. C. J. Knott, 2nd Batn., in the forty-ninth year of his age, which took place at Colaba on July 19, after an illness of several weeks. The deceased officer enlisted in the Rifle Brigade in 1855. After ten years' service in the ranks he obtained his ensigncy, and subsequently became quartermaster of his battalion. He afterwards exchanged to the 15th East Yorkshire Regt. He served with the Rifle Brigade in the Indian Mutiny, including the action at Cawnpore, siege and capture of Lucknow, and several other minor engagements. He also served with the Rifle Brigade in the campaign on the North-West Frontier, and with the 15th East Yorkshire Regt. in Southern Afghanistan in 1880. Capt. Knott possessed the Indian Mutiny medal with clasp for Lucknow, medal and clasp for North-West Frontier, and Afghanistan medal of 1879-80. The late Capt. Knott was a native of Dorchester, and had completed over 29 years' service. He was a type of the good soldier who entered the Army to make it his home.

18th Royal Irish. The 1st Batn. is under orders for Egypt, and will leave Bombay in the transport Hankow on the 28th inst.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. 20th Regiment, at Fermoy, commemorated the victory of Minden on Aug. 1. In this battle, fought in 1759, Kingsley's Regiment, the 20th, lost, according to Cannon's " Records," more than 300 killed and wounded. Regimental traditions have it that the regiment was posted in a field of roses, and that immediately previous to the British advance, Col. Kingsley gave the word to pluck a rose to be placed in the hat as emblematic of home, and then to fix bayonets to give the enemy a taste of British steel. Since then, on Aug. 1, a rose is worn in the headdress of each officer and man, the colour is trooped, the men get better dinners than usual, and athletic sports are held. All these time-honoured customs have been carried out this year with the usual liberality and spirit.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieut. Stannell, 1st Batn., has been selected for service with the Mounted Infantry in Egypt.

25th King's Own Borderers. The 2nd Batn. left Cork for Dublin on Thursday, and is quartered in the Royal Barracks.

36th Worcestershire Regiment. Major-Gen. Wray made his annual inspection on the 6th and 7th inst., at St. Peter's, Jersey, where the battalion had been encamped since July 8, for a month's instruction. Head-quarters and five companies, under command of Col. Lloyd, returned to Fort Regent on Saturday, the 9th inst., leaving a detachment of three companies at St. Peters, under command of Major Parsons. Lieut.-Col. Beamish has sent in his papers to retire on full-pay.

He served with the 60th Rifles in the Indian campaign in 1858, and acted as field-adjt. of Col. Walter's column employed against the rebels in Shahabad (mentioned in despatches, medal). Also throughout the campaign of 1860 in China, including the action of Sinho, and taking of Taku forts (mentioned in despatches, medal with two clasps, and promoted capt. unattached). From March, 1875, to May, 1876, he filled the adjutancy of the 1st Durham Militia, and was subsequently in the Indian Quartermaster-General's Department. Obituary.

We regret to announce that Lieut.-Gen. the Duke of Wellington, K.G., died suddenly on the platform at the Brighton Railway Station on Wednesday afternoon. For some time past the Duke had been somewhat unwell, and by the advice of his medical attendant he had gone to Brighton for a change. The deceased, Arthur Richard Wellesley, Duke and Marquis of Wellington, Somerset; Marquis of Douro; Earl of Wellington, Somerset; Viscount Wellington of Talavera and of Wellington, and Baron Douro of Wellesley, both in the same county, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom; Earl of Mornington, Viscount Wellesley of Dangan Castle, and Baron Mornington of Mornington, county of Meath, in the Peerage of Ireland; Prince of Waterloo, in the Netherlands; Duke of Ciudad Rodrigo, and a Grandee of Spain of the First Class; Duke of Vittoria, Marquis of Torres Vedras, and Count Vimiera in Portugal, was the elder son of the great Duke of Wellington by his wife, the Hon. Catherine Pakenham, third daughter of Edward Michael, second Lord Longford, and was born February 3, 1807, so that he was in his 78th year. He was educated at Eton, entered the Army in 1823, and became Lieutenant-Colonel in August, 1834, when he went on half-pay. He was Aide-de-Camp to his father when Commander-in-Chief, from 1842 to 1852, and was appointed Lieut.-Gen. in February, 1862. Many years ago he was a member of the House of Commons, having represented Aldeburgh (Suffolk) in three Parliaments previous to the Reform Bill of 1832, and was first elected for Norwich in 1837, for which city he sat till July, 1852. In politics he was a Liberal-Conservative, and in favour of Free-trade. He succeeded to the title and other distinguished honours conferred on his illustrious father on Sept. 14, 1852, and to the Irish Peerage on the death of his cousin, the late Earl of Mornington, in July, 1863. The late Duke was Master of the Horse to the Queen from January, 1853, when he was made a Privy Councillor, to February, 1858, and was made a Knight of the Garter in the last-named year. On the death of the late Marquis of Salisbury, his Grace was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Middlesex. His Grace was an influential supporter of the Volunteer Rifle movement, and on the formation of the Victoria Rifles was selected as Lieutenant-Colonel commandant. Of late years his Grace took no active part in politics, but he was a supporter of the late Earl of Beaconsfield's Government. The deceased Duke married, April 18, 1839, Lady Elizabeth Hay, fourth daughter of George, eighth Marquis of Tweeddale. The Duchess was a Lady of the Bedchamber from 1843 to 1858, and Mistress of the Robes to the Queen from 1861 to December, 1868, and again from February, 1874, to May, 1880. As the Duke leaves no issue the dukedom and other honours devolve upon his nephew, Lieut.-Col. Henry Wellesley, late of the Grenadier Guards, eldest surviving son of the late Lord Charles Wellesley and Augusta, only daughter of the late Mr. Henry Manvers Pierrepont. Col. Wellesley was born April 5, 1846. He retired from the Army in 1882. From February, 1874, to March, 1880, he sat for Andover in the House of Commons. In 1882 he married Evelyn, daughter of the late Col. T. Peers Williams, of Temple House, Bucks.

A REGIMENT OF GENTLEMEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The above subject, so frequently during the last few years brought before the public, has again cropped up, and many parents and guardians chime in for the plan with good reason. One thousand candidates for one hundred vacancies have been undergoing their severe examination at Burlington House! Surely some two hundred of the unsuccessful would be only too glad to form the nucleus of an educated and most promising corps? Their pay, clothing, and provisioning should be strictly the same as in the regular established Line. Non-commissioned officers, in the first instance, could be "lent" or "seconded" for the purpose of drill and technical soldiering, and officers from the Half-pay or Retired List—more especially those who have served as adjutants to Volunteers for obvious reasons—could be secured for the incipient frame-work of the prospected regiment. When perfected to the full satisfaction of the General of the District, the temporary officers and non-commissioned officers might be gradually eliminated, and the corps made to do duty at home and abroad. Many would join and fill up the ranks to the needed number of bayonets, say 800. The promotion should be, as much as possible, by seniority and through the body, that is, from the lowest rank to the highest, consistently with merit and conduct. What joy the acceptation by Government of this scheme would afford in the present plethora of military competitors, and in the dearth of other employment in sufficiently eligible lines of life for the sons of gentry! If you, Mr. Editor, will start this subject, fitter and more skilled correspondents will, doubtless, contribute requisite details to your columns to render it complete, and thus eventually to attract official attention. Though many spirited candidates have enlisted from what are called "the better classes" in the regular Army as it is—33 in one, 15 in another, 12 in a third, and so on, within the last year—their friends are most likely dissatisfied with their prospects.—I am, &c., F. O. (h.p.)

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. THE NEW FRENCH ARMY LIST.

According to the latest issue of the French Army List, France has at the present time in her active army:—3 marshals of France; 6 generals of divisions, who remain with the army irrespective of age; 100 generals of divisions and 200 generals of brigades; 406 colonels,—of whom 165 belong to the infantry, 84 to the cavalry, 76 to the artillery, 37 to the engineers, and 17 to the gendarmerie, 25 are with the general staff, and 2 in the topographical office; 440 lieutenant-colonels,—35 with the general staff, 3 in the topographical office, 117 with the infantry, 90 with the cavalry, 77 with the artillery, 37 with the engineers, 4 with the train, and 17 with the gendarmerie; 1,940 commanders of battalions and chefs of squadrons of equal rank,—of these, 100 are with the general staff, and 7 in the topographical office; with the infantry are 964; cavalry, 279; artillery, 322; engineers, 148; train, 18; and with the gendarmerie 102. Of the 7,747 captains and chefs of squadrons of equal rank, 140 are with the general staff, 4,214 with the infantry, 1,076 cavalry, 1,393 artillery, 441 engineers, 163 train, and 320 with the gendarmerie. The 5,919 lieutenants are divided as follows:—3,404 infantry, 929 cavalry, 1,029 artillery, 130 engineers, 133 train, 294 gendarmerie. There are 5,071 sub-lieutenants; of these, 3,736 are with the infantry, 806 cavalry, 306 artillery, 100 engineers, 51 train, and 72 with the gendarmerie. Total, 21,832 active officers. Of officials, the Army List shows 5,642 of the rank of officer, besides 1,300 surgeons, 185 apothecaries, 419 veterinary surgeons, 54 field railway, 185 field telegraph, and 1,415 army administrative officials. There are with the Reserve:—17 generals of divisions, 18 generals of brigades, 19 colonels, 13 lieutenant-colonels, 30 commanders of battalions and chefs of squadrons, 195 captains, 174 lieutenants, and 7,135 sub-lieutenants; total, 7,601 officers. The Landwehr includes 13 colonels of engineers, 296 lieutenant-colonels, 1,056 commanders of battalions and chefs d'escadrons, 4,162 captains, 5,672 lieutenants, and 5,067 sub-lieutenants; total, 16,270 officers. Altogether the French Army has, in accordance with the Army List, 45,703 officers and 12,798 officials.

EVOLUTIONS OF THE RESERVE SQUADRON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I regret to have to take exception to the tone of your correspondent's letters relative to the Reserve Squadron, and also to your leading article on the same subject. In the former, your correspondent alludes to the bad station kept by the ships of the Squadron during the cruise, &c. This is hardly consistent with facts. I consider that, taken altogether, the ships have kept station fairly well, and the steam tactics have been carried out in a creditable manner. It must be remembered that these ships constitute a scratch pack, hastily brought together; that no two of them are alike as regards revolutions of engines or turning powers, that the officers have but limited experience of them, and that some of the lieutenants are only appointed for the cruise; consequently, it cannot be expected that the ships should, from the first, perform the evolutions with that precision which would be expected from a squadron accustomed to cruise together for long periods. Although the ships may be obsolete, the term can hardly be applied to either their officers or men. Indeed, as regards the latter, a finer body of men could not be found in any Fleet in any part of the world, and although the Channel and Mediterranean Squadrons might, and probably would, show us the way to cross upper yards and such-like useless evolutions, in the matter of gun-drill, in and out boats and heavy drill, the Reserve Squadron would be fully up to the standard. But the whole tone of the Press, notably the Western Morning News, has been to throw dirt upon the Squadron and their doings from first to last. I apprehend the correspondent of that paper must be of a bilious temperament, for nothing seems to please him, from the operations of the Admiral downwards. Even the destination of the Squadron does not find favour in his eyes, as though the object of the cruise was to show the ships off and be infested with sightseers, instead of selecting more out-of-the-way places, where the drills and coaling, &c., could be proceeded with unmolested. The Admiral commanding seems to be his pet aversion, and I am told that he (the correspondent W. M. N.) actually hinted that this cruise was selected with a view to save the Admiral's table money! The Admiral can well afford to smile at these malicious remarks, as well as at those reflecting upon his tactics. I much regret, therefore, to see such expressions as "disgraceful" appear in your leader of the 26th ult. It is possible that a longer cruise might be beneficial to officers and men; but the term is regulated with regard to the Coastguard men, who have to be back at their stations at an appointed time. Short as the cruise has been, considerable experience has been gained by the captains and others in mooring and unmooring in narrow waters, and the various manœuvres incidental to an evolutionary squadron; and I maintain that the sweeping assertions of incompetency advanced by special correspondents are uncalled for and unfounded.—I am, &c., R.N.

A MISSION BOAT FOR MALTA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—For the last seventeen years, the Missions to Seamen has, at a cost of from £120 to £140 a year, maintained a reader with a boat and boatman at Malta for the service of the shipping, but especially of the merchant shipping. The reader acts under the local supervision of the incumbent of St. Paul's, Valetta, and with the sanction of the Naval chaplains. About four years ago, we lost two mission-boats in gregales, and the present ones being worn out, we require a new twelve-foot boat, with mast, sails, oars, and awning, &c., which would cost about £12. Would those interested in Malta and able to help communicate with Mr. Thomas Bolingbroke, 94 Strada Miratore, Floriana, Malta; or with, yours faithfully,

WM. DAWSON, Commander, R.N., and Secretary ?

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1884.

A SHORT time ago a letter appeared from Mr. Andrew in the Times, nagging at the armies of the Princes of the native States of India. With respect to these armies, the inconvenience of which must be admitted, there is only one thing to be said,—that unless the Princes consent to abrogate the treaties under which they are entitled to maintain artillery, cavalry, and infantry, we can do very little but watch over the actual uses and numbers of these forces, and on occasion, perhaps, use such arguments as are likely to be influential to induce the native States to diminish their military establishments. We certainly cannot use force, unless we are prepared for something like a rebellion or civil war, and the utter extinction of all native States and the violation of treaties, conventions, and the like. It is obvious that if these armies were disbanded, a considerable increment would be given to the mischievous and dangerous classes, and there would be a necessity for a corresponding increase in the strength of the British troops in India, the provision for which now taxes all our energies at home. Probably the increase of outrages reported on British territory by Dacoits from the native States will cause attention to be directed to this matter; but it is evident that it should be handled with very great caution. There are quite grounds enough for suspicion and dislike; and great encouragement will be given to the active agencies which are threatening our dominion from the north-west beyond Afghanistan if it be discovered that each of the great native States has become a centre of disaffection, which only needs provocation and support to become overtly dangerous. The Indian Army is about to feel the force of the reforming hand, which has already been masterful enough in its dealings with the Army at home. Military Secretaries, Accountants-General, Commissaries-General, &c., hereafter must vacate their posts after five years, or as soon as they succeed to Colonels' allowances. Deputy and Commissaries-General retire on being promoted to Major-General. Assistant-Secretaries in the Military Department and Transport Department are to be borne on the strength of the regiment seconded. An exception is made in favour of officers who were appointed before January 1 to any post of which the tenure was formerly indefinite. They will be allowed seven years from the date of their appointment, or such extension, not exceeding two years, as will enable them to complete thirty-two years' service. There will probably be some cases of grievance. But the War Office and the India Office are pretty well accustomed to outcries upon that account, and listen to them with divine calm; and the Times will set to work to show that no substantial injustice has been done.

The late Duke of Wellington had so long retired from the Army, that all traces of his military career appear to have been lost sight of by the compilers of the obituary notices, which are one and all in error in stating that he had passed his service in the Rifle Brigade. As Marquis of Douro, the late Duke was gazetted as a youngster of sixteen to an ensigncy in May, 1823, and was almost immediately appointed to the Royal Horse Guards, at that time under the command of a distinguished Peninsula and Waterloo sabreur, the late General Clement Hill. He continued in the Blues for five years, and was promoted lieutenant in July, 1827, his younger brother, the late Major-General Lord Charles Wellesley, being also with him in the regiment as a subaltern. In May following he purchased an unattached captaincy; in November, 1830, was gazetted to an unattached majority, and in August, 1831, we find him appointed to the 2nd Battalion, Rifle Brigade. As a major he went to the depôt, and without joining head-quarters was gazetted to an unattached lieutenant-colonelcy in August, 1834, joining the staff of his father in 1842. His ten years' service at head-quarters was his last military duty, as after the death of his father, he practically retired from the Army, receiving promotion to Major-General in the huge brevet of June, 1854, and to lieutenant-general in February, 1862. His fellow aides-de-camp on the staff of the "Iron Duke" were the late General the Hon. George Anson, who died before Delhi, and the present Dukes of Richmond and Beaufort.

Major-General Sir John Ross, K.C.B., returns to India in October to resume his command of the Poona division of the Bombay Army.

We rightly surmised that the scribes who for months slandered and ridiculed the Mudir of Dongola would not have the decency to acknowledge that they were wrong when he was proved to be, as we always maintained he was, a valiant, truthful soldier. Even to the very last moment they maligned him, and their latest falsehood was that he had not received any letter from Gordon at all. Major Kitchener's report finally swept away the cloud of lies about the man, and he stands revealed as a stern, honest, sour Mahometan, hating Christians as strenuously as Gordon hates Turks and Pashas. There would, indeed, appear to be certain points of resemblance between the two men, and in more respects than one their treatment offers analogies. The Mudir of Dongola is a believer in the Koran—he is a devout Moslem. Disgusted with his Government, and sick at heart at the want of confidence and support shown to him, and the neglect paid to his urgent requests for arms and ammunition, which was all he needed to clear the whole country up to Khartoum as completely as he had cleared his Mudirieh, he wants to make a pilgrimage to Mecca. He fought and overcame his enemies for all that, and now some pale-faced Christian will come in and claim all the credit and gain all the rewards of his heroic exertions and devotion. Gordon is an Old Testament Christian, and he will probably—if there be probability of any kind in his case—go to Palestine again when he has handed over Khartoum to some conquering hero from Cairo. He, too, asked for help in vain, but no one distrusted him. If we are not much mistaken, Gordon will admit that his position would have been more serious had not the Mudir of Dongola kept the district free from the enemy. How far different will be the estimation and the recompense of the two men!

The recent fortification paper for majors of the Army has given great discontent even among the Engineers, all complaining of its abstruseness. This reminds us of a somewhat ludicrous episode, which proves what a farce these Army examinations are. An officer quartered at Chatham was noted for his proficiency in military drawing. Another officer knew nothing about it. The latter asked the former to coach him for a week, and came out of the exam. with flying colours in this subject, obtaining a first-class and special mention. The teacher, however, barely qualified with a third class. But then his pupil was an A.D.C., and the teacher a Marine Officer.

In the recent Army Returns, lately presented to Parliament, of the ages of the recruits who joined the Infantry during 1883, but 768 are put down as under 17 years, and only 39 from 17 to 18; the bulk of those enlisted, 14,680, are stated to be from 18 to 20.

We believe we are right in saying that the original memo. on the new system of attack, of which as approved we gave an account last week, was drawn up by Major-Gen. Newdigate more than a year ago, but that objections were made to the introduction of the double-company system at the Horse Guards. The use of the half-battalions, as understood in our Army, was turned to account by Gen. Newdigate, but when battalions are raised to war strength the half-battalion appears to be too large for the tactical unit. Two great points are gained in the new attack, as we pointed out last week. The command is decentralised, and the officers and men of each unit work together to the great advantage of the whole, and to the prevention of the mixing and muddling which were fraught with such disastrous results at the two attacks on the Redan, at Majuba, &c.

Major W. R. H. Crawford, 91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir Leicester Smyth, Commanding the Forces in South Africa.

If, as is generally anticipated, the vacant Colonelcy of the Coldstream Guards is given to an ex-officer of the regiment, General Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., is expected to get the appointment. The present Commander of the Forces in Ireland entered the Coldstreams as ensign and lieutenant in 1838, and remained in the regiment until November, 1863, a period of over 25 years. Sir Thomas Steele is also the son of a Coldstream Guardsman, his father, the late Major-General Thomas Steele, having served in the regiment for many years. General W. S. Newton, at present Colonel of the 82nd South Lancashire Regiment, is also mentioned in connection with the vacancy, by reason of his long previous connection with the regiment, which he joined as ensign and lieutenant in December, 1834, and quitted in July, 1861.

Brevet Major W. F. Kelly, 35th Royal Sussex Regiment, has been appointed Brigade-Major on the Staff of Major-General A. J. Lyon-Fremantle, Captain the Hon. F. W. Stopford, Grenadier Guards, taking up the duties of Aide-de-Camp.

We hear many expressions of a general wish that the vacancy as Chaplain-General to the Forces may be filled by the selection of one of the senior Army Chaplains. A similar wish was expressed when Mr. Gleig retired full of years and honours. On that occasion the late Dr. Claughton was selected for the appointment, to the not unnatural disappointment of the officers of a department which carries with it the universal respect of the service. May we hope that the War Office will on this occasion make a selection for the post from the officers of the Chaplain's Department?

Twenty-one officers of Militia will be examined at Aldershot for commissions in the Line on the 17th prox.

A further reduction of the few remaining Staff Officers of Pensioners has been made by the retirement of Majors Hesketh and Sweeney, two out of the three officers borne on the Staff in Canada. Only 14 officers now remain on the once lengthy list of S.O.P.'s.

In the interests of the taxpayers, we invite attention to the special expenses incident to punishing district court-martial prisoners in Guernsey. In that island there is no military prison, though there are cells in which prisoners may be confined, by sentence of commanding officers or by regimental courts-martial, for a period not exceeding 42 days. In consequence of this want of prison accommodation, district court-martial prisoners have to be sent under escort to England, and taken at considerable expense, viâ Weymouth, to Taunton, Devonshire, the escort returning to Guernsey. When the sentence has expired, the escort has to again go from Guernsey to England and fetch the prisoners back again. The garrison of Guernsey is not a large one, but there are a certain number of guards and other duties which keep the soldiers amply employed, and the diminution of the duty-men by the escorts mentioned presses upon the deserving soldiers. Probably, if we add the expense of an occasional witness from the United Kingdom to attend courts-martial in Guernsey, it may be found that each soldier tried there costs the taxpayer at least £5 in these sea voyages and sailing trips backwards and forwards between the English military prison. The railway and steamboat company no doubt approve of the arrangement, but in the taxpayers' interests we think it is questionable. It is, of course, no fault of the authorities in Guernsey that the regulations do not allow district court-martial prisoners to be confined either in the town jail of Guernsey or in the military provost.

As evidence of the reduced condition of the Aldershot command at the present time, the number on parade, of all arms, including Volunteers, at the sham-fight yesterday (Friday), did not exceed 8,500 of all ranks, and of this number at least 5,000 were Volunteers. And this sort of thing is called, "Having a week's drill with the Regulars." It looks very much like the Regulars having a week's drill with the Volunteers. The Infantry arm of the Aldershot Division proper consists just now of six very weak battalions, whose aggregate strength is about equal to two service-battalions; and it is very questionable, indeed, whether one battalion for service in the field could be organised from the whole available force.

Viscount Castlerosse, who holds a commission as lieutenant in the Worcestershire Militia, takes up the appointment of Aide-de-Camp to Sir Henry B. Loch, the new Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Victoria.

The daily papers announce as a piece of news that Colonel C. H. Barnes, R.A., has been appointed to the command of the Royal Artillery in Egypt. As a matter of fact, Colonel Barnes has held that appointment for several weeks past.

Notwithstanding that attention was directed to the subject of mixed guards (i.e., guards composed of non-commissioned officers and men of various corps) some time ago, and explanations given that it was impossible then to discontinue them, owing to the disproportion of non-commissioned officers and men in the various Infantry battalions, but that they would be discontinued at an early date, this practice still prevails at various military stations, and notably at Aldershot. Surely there can be now no pressing necessity for the continuance of this most undesirable and unsoldierlike practice, when all corps seem to be very much alike, on a reduced peace establishment.

Captain T. H. Phipps, 7th Hussars, who has just completed a course of Staff College instruction at Aldershot, has been appointed to the Mounted Infantry in Egypt, and will embark on Wednesday next.

A long line of distinguished officers have filled the Colonelcy of the Coldstream Guards, commencing with George Monk, Duke of Albemarle, whose successors were William, Earl of Craven, Thomas Tollemache, John, Lord Cutts, Charles Churchill, William, Earl Cadogan, Richard, Earl of Scarborough, William, Duke of Cumberland, Charles, Second Duke of Marlborough, the Earl of Albemarle, Lord Tyrawley, Earl Waldegrave, and Frederick, Duke of York. In the present century the Coldstreams have had as their Colonel the late Duke of Cambridge, 1805 to 1850; John Byng, Earl of Strafford, 1850 to 1860; Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde, 1860 to 1863; Sir William Maynard Gomm, 1863 to 1875; and Sir William Codrington, 1875 to 1884.

We hear of a Battery of Garrison Artillery mustering but 27 men all told, instead of the establishment of 104. This is, we suppose, evidence of the satisfactory condition of the Army as stated in the "inspired press."

The mode in which officers are now appointed to the Royal Horse Artillery is attracting much attention. It is noted as a singular circumstance that one-half of the regimental Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors of that arm are borne on the Indian lists; this is hardly satisfactory to the old Royal Regiment.

By the middle of September, Sir Frederick Stephenson may count on no less than twelve Infantry battalions under his command, the latest orders from head-quarters having detailed the 1st Battalion, 18th Royal Irish, and the 70th East Surrey Regiment to proceed to Egypt from India. Telegrams from Simla inform us that the former is to embark at Bombay, on board the transport Hankow, on the 28th inst., the 70th following on September 6, in that rare old slave, the troopship Himalaya. Both regiments expected to return to England in the ordinary reliefs, but will doubtless rejoice at the opportunity of seeing active service in the projected expedition to Khartoum, if they only get a chance of forming part of the force. The 1st Battalion of the Royal Irish, which has not been under fire since Sebastopol, has been on foreign service since January, 1872; and the 70th has been in India since October, 1871, taking part in the Afghan campaign of 1878-9, when it had no great opportunities of distinguishing itself.

Surgeon-Major E. C. Markey, medical officer in charge of the Cambridge Hospital, Aldershot, is held in readiness for immediate embarkation for Egypt. Brigade-Surgeon E. G. McDowell, C.B., has been ordered to Aldershot to assume charge of the Cambridge Hospital.

The Sappho was immediately ordered to the scene of disaster, and in attempting to put the Marine Superintendent, Capt. King, on board the Valdivia, her boat was capsized in the surf, and Capt. King was drowned; the Lieutenant in charge and crew managed to save themselves. The Sappho returned to Callao on July 7 without having been able to render any assistance to the ill-fated vessel, which is on shore with all her compartments full of water, and several plates knocked out of her bottom.

VALOROUS, Capt. Hon. Richard Hare, proceeded to Bantry on the 11th inst.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Methinks "An Eye-Witness" doth "protest too much." He writes, "There is actually no possible danger in columns being two cables apart,—indeed there would be none if the columns were only one cable apart." Now it is perfectly clear that the collision of the Defence with the Valiant was due to the columns being less than the authorised formation apart, and in the very close order which "An Eye-Witness" says is without danger. I quite admit that Capt. Pollard miscalculated his distance or rather misguessed it, and therefore attempted a movement the safety of which depended on the correctness of some one else's observation or his own judgment. But just as the strength of a chain is only the strength of its weakest link, so the intelligence of a fleet is only the modicum of brains of the most stupid officer in it. And when the serious consequences of a collision between two ironclads are considered, it is my opinion that it is the duty of the officer in command of the squadron to keep the ships under his orders in an absolutely safe formation, so that no error in judgment can seriously imperil them. It is all very well for "An Eye-Witness" to say the evolution could have been performed with ease by any midshipman. But Capt. Pollard, whatever his errors may have been, is not an inexperienced officer, and the mistake he made (namely, misjudging his distance) has been made before, and will unquestionably be made again, though we will hope with less serious results. For, be it recollected, had the Defence just shaved clear of the Valiant, there would probably have been no court-martial, though Capt. Pollard's manœuvring would have been just as wrong. When "An Eye-Witness" speaks of the masterly manner in which Sir A. Hoskins anchored his fleet "in a dense fog with a five-knot tide running," I am reminded of Paul Dombey and Mrs. Pipchin. On Mrs. Pipchin threatening Paul with the fate of the little boy who was gored to death by a mad bull for asking questions, Paul sensibly remarked, "I don't believe that. If the bull was mad, how did he know the boy asked questions?" So I say, if the fog was dense, how could the Admiral see whether his ships were in station or not? The merit of this evolution must have depended on the individual captains, of whom Capt. Pollard was one. It is absolutely and fatally untrue that the closer columns are together the safer the ships are. Ships in line-ahead can hardly be too close, especially in thick weather, as, if one does run into the other, she does so before the second ahead has lost any of her way, and the consequences will probably be as slight as the collision of two such bodies can be expected to be. But columns should be kept well apart, so that if a ship has to sheer out of the line for any purpose, or an error be made in estimating the distance, the result may be safety, and not danger. Undoubtedly our officers have not sufficient experience in handling their ships; but how are they to get it when we have no regular squadrons of exercise; but under no circumstances whatever can he hope to avoid occasional accidents or errors in judgment. As to what will happen in time of war, I presume "An Eye-Witness" knows no more than any one else. One thing will certainly happen,—viz., the total collapse of all theory. The present extensive "Signal Book" will be shut up, and with it all the smart young officers, telescopes, and sextants. Every captain will be left to fight his ship his own way, and the man with the clearest head, the hardest heart, and best digestion will (other things being any like equal) undoubtedly win.—I am, &c., REAR-ADMIRAL.

THE GUNNERY EXPERIMENTS AT INCHKEITH.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

The experiments recently carried out at Inchkeith, in the Firth of Forth, are of a novel and very important character. They were undertaken to ascertain the effect of fire from machine and quick-firing guns, and also from shrapnel shell fired from heavy guns, on a heavy gun and its detachment in a barbette emplacement. The Island of Inchkeith is armed with four 10-in. rifled muzzle-loading guns in barbette emplacements, and one of these, on the northern extremity of the island, was selected to undergo the test. H.M.S. Sultan, which has been temporarily detached from the Channel Squadron, carried out the firing. The operations commenced on Thursday, the 7th. The committee consisted of Sir Andrew Clarke, Inspector-General of Fortifications; Gen. Reilly, Inspector-General of Artillery and Stores, and eight other officers. About 10 o'clock the Sultan got under weigh and took up the position assigned to her to the westward of the island. Dummy figures were put up in the emplacement representing the gun numbers in the act of loading. The practice commenced with the machine-guns, at a range of about 1,000 yards; the firing from the various guns was arranged in different series. The first comprised the Nordenfelt 1-in. guns, four in number the next, four Gardner and two Gatling, both ·45 in., fired from the deck; then two Gardners, ·45 in., fired from the tops; and finally, the Hotchkiss 37-millimètre gun. Fire on each occasion was sustained for two minutes, and at the expiration of each series the gun and emplacement were minutely examined, and a record made of all damage done. While the machine-gun firing was going on, the heavy guns of the ship were fired with blank charges at half minute intervals, to render the conditions of firing as nearly as possible similar to those which would exist in an actual engagement as far as smoke and noise go. The next series consisted of 50 rounds from the Nordenfelt 6-pounder rapid-firing gun, at a range of about 1,500 yards. This completed the machine and rapid-gun practice. Shrapnel shell were then fired from the 10-in. gun, at ranges of 3,500, 2,500, and 1,500 yards, five rounds being fired at each range. Some damage was done to the gun and battery, and several of the dummies were hit, but the result of the machine-gun firing was on the whole disappointing, and the conclusion was arrived at that two minutes was not a sufficiently long period to give a fair estimate of their capabilities. On the following day practice was prevented by a fog. On Saturday, the 9th, the several series of machine-gun firings were repeated, with the difference that fire was sustained in each case for five minutes instead of two. An additional series was also carried out, which consisted of all the machine-guns which could be brought to bear being fired simultaneously for ten minutes,—the first five with the gun end on, and the second with it broadside on. The firing was very good, and the result showed a marked difference to the first day's practice. The observation party on the island signalled, after examining the results of the various series:—"Emplacement much knocked about;" "Very hot, four numbers killed, bullets all over the place, twenty or thirty hits on gun and carriage;" "Three dummies hit, and gun hit all over;" and at last, "Effect so good that it will take a full hour to record damages." On receiving the last report the Committee decided to stop operations for the day, and inspect the battery. On Monday, the 11th, the shrapnel-shell firing from the heavy guns was carried out. Five rounds were fired at 3,000, 2,000 and 1,000 yards respectively, and it had been intended to fire five rounds of common shell afterwards; but the result of the shrapnel fire proved to be so damaging to the gun and works, and so deadly to the gun numbers, that at the expiration of it it was decided that nothing further could be learnt by going on with the common shell series, and that an unnecessary amount of damage would be likely to ensue; so the experiments were brought to a close. The shrapnel fire was very accurate; several of the shells exploded so close to the gun that, viewed from the ship, it was for the time quite hidden. Many important lessons will doubtless be learnt from these experiments, as the fullest possible notes were taken by the various members of the committee.

In the German Military Gazette, we find the following exceedingly interesting article on the strength of the Fleets of the leading Naval Powers:—"England stands first, with 25 modern line-of-battle ships, fulfilling all requirements of the present time, and 14 obsolete men-of-war, 9 modern and 6 obsolete ironclads for coast defence, and 3 ironclad cruisers. France follows, with 16 modern and 9 obsolete line-of-battle ships, and 7 modern and 8 obsolete ironclads for coast defence. Next to these two most important Naval Powers ranks Germany, with 9 modern (5 ironclad frigates, 4 ironclad corvettes) line-of-battle ships, fulfilling all requirements of the present day, and 3 obsolete ironclad ships (the ironclad frigates Kronprinz and Friedrich Karl, and the ironclad corvette Hansa), 11 modern ironclad vessels for coast defence (11 ironclad gunboats all completed), and 1 obsolete vessel, the ironclad Arminius. Austria takes fourth place, with 3 modern and 7 obsolete line-of-battle ships. Italy has 2 modern and 11 obsolete ironclad ships at her disposal. Russia has only a single first-class line-of-battle ship and 7 obsolete ironclads, 2 modern and 16 obsolete ironclad vessels for coast defence, and 4 ironclad cruisers. Denmark possesses 2 modern and 2 obsolete line-of-battle ships, and 2 modern and 2 obsolete ironclad vessels for coast defence. Holland, 1 modern battle-ship and 17 modern ironclad vessels for coast-defence. This shows that Great Britain still holds first place with her ironclad fleet; France, second; Germany, third; Italy, fourth; Russia, fifth; and Austria, sixth place. France, however, is building at present 14 vessels of the most powerful description, and 8 similarly powerful ironclad vessels for coast-defence, against 7 line-of-battle ships and 5 ironclad cruisers building in Great Britain. In a few years, therefore, France will be able to dispose of 30 battle-ships, of which 12 are of first-class fighting-power, and Great Britain of 32 battle-ships, numbering, however, only a single vessel of about equal strength to the 12 French ships. Italy is constructing 5 battle-ships of first-class power; Russia, 3 battle-ships and 3 ironclad cruisers; Germany, 1 ironclad cruiser and 2 ironclad gunboats; Austria, 1 battle-ship; Denmark, 1 ironclad for coast-defence. Great Britain's pre-eminence on the seas is, therefore, most decidedly menaced by France, with the completion of the vessels building by both States. As Great Britain is obliged to employ a great portion of her Fleet in the Mediterranean and at many distant stations, it may be presumed that from 1887 or 1888 a French Fleet of 42 ironclads would be opposed to an English Fleet of, at most, 30 ironclads, including in the latter the vessels reserved for coast defence."

The under-mentioned have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct:—J. Newman, Serapis; G. Lemon, Asia; J. Hewlett and W. Pitt, Excellent; H. Goodman, Indus; J. Coyde, A. Williams, and W. H. Rowe, Cambridge; W. Bell and W. J. Rowe, Repulse; W. Stanhope, J. Duhig, W. Robson, J. T. Marshall, C. J. Godden, T. Johnson, E. Walsh, J. S. Elliott, W. J. McNally, W. J. K. Brown, R. C. Whitaker, D. Thomas, E. Mihagen, J. C. Ransome, T. Kelly, J. Phillips, J. Dunnaway, S. Moon, D. Sullivan, and G. Thompson, of the Coastguard.

A correspondent wrote from Valetta, on July 25, to a contemporary, as follows:—"The Wanderer left here yesterday afternoon for the China station. She is a most uncomfortable ship, according to all accounts, and unpleasantness is of almost daily occurrence. The captain and the first lieutenant do not seem to live in harmony. The former has made application for the latter to be superseded, and the lieutenant, on hearing of this, made application for a court of inquiry to be held into his conduct. This inquiry was held on Wednesday by Capt. Domville, of the Temeraire, assisted by Com. Corry, of the Superb, and was a very lengthy affair. The report, a voluminous one, was sent to the Commander-in-Chief, who will forward it to the Admiralty. The result is anticipated with keen interest. The state of affairs on board the Superb is also capable, so it is said, of very great improvement. There is not that feeling of esprit de corps among the officers that is essential to what is known as a 'happy ship,' and the result is that there is a growing feeling of dislike of the ship and of the service that allows such a state of things as exists on board the Superb. Some time back her captain took upon himself to reprimand one of the lieutenants. The lieutenant refused to accept the reprimand. He was then severely reprimanded, and it was entered in the log-book. He still refused to accept it, and the matter was referred to the Commander-in-Chief, who informed the captain that he had not the power to reprimand an officer. A short time since, the officer in question, having been appointed to another ship, had orders to leave by mail steamer, which was to start about 4 p.m. Two hours before this a party of Marines received instructions to clear out his cabin, and this order was carried out, the whole of the traps being bundled out into the steerage before one-half of it had been packed. Comment is needless. But this little incident shows the extent to which petty spite can be carried in her Majesty's Navy. If an officer or man does not do his duty to the best of his abilities, there is a way, and an acknowledged legal way, of punishing the delinquent, but to adopt a system of worry and annoyance is opposed to all recognised Naval instructions and regulations, and the sooner a stop is put to it the better for the service and for the country."

London Amusements.

The annual Promenade Concerts at COVENT GARDEN THEATRE commenced on Saturday night, Mr. W. F. Thomas being again the responsible manager, Mr. A. Gwyllym Crowe the conductor, and Mr. Carrodus the leader. An excellent orchestra, numbering about one hundred performers, is strengthened, as usual, by the band of the Coldstream Guards; and Madame Rose Hersee and Madame Enriquez, with Mr. Joseph Maas and Mr. Santley, have delighted the audiences with songs, all rendered in most admirable style and, when encored, varied in compliance with the exacting demands of an enthusiastic public. The electric light is once more employed, and the adjoining Floral Hall is again transformed into a vast refreshment room and gigantic smoking divan. According to precedent, Wednesday evenings are set apart for classical concerts, the first one, introducing Chevalier Leonhard Emilbach, pianist to the Royal Prussian Court. A vocal waltz, entitled "See-Saw," in which children's voices are harmoniously introduced, is a prominent feature of the new programme.

The HAYMARKET has been reopened for an autumnal season, under the management of Mr. C. Brookfield, a clever young actor, who, as a member of Mr. Bancroft's company, will be remembered to have played some subordinate characters with marked distinction. It may be presumed that Mr. Brookfield has entered on his present speculation with the object of showing that his abilities have a yet wider range, and it may be acknowledged that his excellent performance of the old Parisian, Stanislas de Fonblanche, in a new version of MM. Jaime and Bayard's comedy, "Le Réveil du Lion," would quite justify sanguine expectations of his future career. The French play was produced at the Gymnase Dramatique on Oct. 2, 1847, and early in the following November it was transferred by Mr. Benjamin Webster to the Haymarket, under the title of "The Roused Lion." Mr. Webster then played the prominent character, and Mrs. Keeley, Miss Reynolds, Mrs. Seymour, and Mr. Alfred Wigan were included in the cast. The elderly Parisian, who has been ungraciously alluded to by a profligate acquaintance of his nephew as a "mummy," revenges himself by recalling the accomplishments of his youth and foiling the sneering youngster at every turn. The adaptation by Mr. W. H. Pollock is now called "Evergreen," and with the picturesque costumes of 1815 and the admirable acting of Mr. C. Brookfield, Miss M. A. Victor, Mr. Maurice, and Mr. H. B. Conway, a bright little French story is very happily illustrated. Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves appears as Tom Tug in Dibdin's old ballad farce of "The Waterman," and a new farce called "A Close Shave" employs the talents of Miss Augusta Wilton, Miss Maud Williamson, Mr. E. Maurice, and Mr. H. Kemble.

Miss Mary Anderson resumes her performance at the LYCEUM on the evening of Saturday, September 6, reproducing "Pygmalion and Galatea" and "Comedy and Tragedy." Mr. Robert Soutar has been appointed stage manager.

The HOLBORN is to be opened, under the management of Mr. Rex Pierson, with a burlesque called "Little Lohengrin," in which Miss Lizzie Coote will play the hero of the extravaganza.

Mr. Edward Terry takes his benefit and closes his present engagement at the GAIETY this (Saturday) evening. The comic opera called "Dick" will be played next week.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—COUGHS, INFLUENZA.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the lungs. In common colds and influenza, the Pills taken internally and the Ointment rubbed externally are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic this treatment is easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills and Ointment purify the blood, remove all obstructions to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the overgorged air tubes, and render respiration free without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits. Such are the ready means of saving suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other complaints, by which so many are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

NEWTON COLLEGE, SOUTH DEVON.

President of Council—The EARL of DEVON.
Head Master—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll., Camb. (assisted by twelve Resident Graduates).

This School now offers a first-class education to the sons of the clergy, officers, professional men, &c., on moderate terms.

The system is arranged so as to embrace every kind of Education necessary for the Universities, Army and Navy, Civil Services, Commercial Life, Colonial Life, &c. There are Classical and Modern sides, quite distinct, with all appliances for a Modern Education separate from that required for the Universities and learned Professions.

The success of the School has been undoubtedly due to the large staff of Masters, and the individual attention which can thus be given to boys of different calibre. The New School Buildings also are a great advantage, and teaching is carried on with facility in the large, airy rooms.

After nearly ten years of work at improvements, the Council feel that they can now offer educational advantages, unrivalled in two Western Counties.

There is a School Chapel, large swimming bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, eight racquet and fives courts, 20 acres of beautifully situated playing fields, &c., and as a proof of the favour extended to the School under the present regime.

The NUMBERS have RISEN from 22 to OVER 150.

A special feature of the work is that of Preparing Boys in a Junior School for the larger Public Schools.

Since 1882, Six Scholarships have been won at Winchester and Marlborough by Newton Boys, and the work in the Examination all round has been quite up to this standard. Owing to its situation, the College has been able to render great assistance to delicate boys, and the highest references can be given on these points. Special Classes for Woolwich and Sandhurst.

A list of honours for the year (including a first-class at Oxford) will be sent on application to the HEAD MASTER. £400 given yearly to Scholarships.

THE presence of eight battalions of Volunteers at Aldershot last week cannot but have impressed those who saw these representatives of the citizen army at work with a feeling of admiration for the martial enthusiasm and true military spirit which pervades the force. Here were some 4,000 or 5,000 men, who from a pure love of soldiering, came forward and undertook to perform all the duties incidental to garrison life. It was no playing at soldiers. The men did not go down to Aldershot for the purpose of "visiting," though they were designated "visitors" in an official document. They went to Aldershot to do what they felt to be their duty, and for the time being they were to all intents and purposes soldiers, and endeavoured to conduct themselves as such. Many of them have gone to the Camp year after year for years past. But whether it was their first appearance or their tenth or twelfth, the spirit by which they were actuated was the same, i.e., an earnest desire to learn something more than they knew of the ins and outs of camp life. It is the practice of some who ought to know better,—including, we regret to say, many Regular officers,—to scoff at the Volunteers, and speak in disparaging terms of the services they render to the State. It is difficult, in face of the recent demonstrations, if such they may be termed, at Aldershot, Chatham, and Shoeburyness, to understand how any sane man can underrate the value of such an organisation,—now that it has abandoned the follies of its infancy—and the only conclusion to be arrived at is that those who scoff do so from ignorance, or what is perhaps more probable, a want of appreciation of the defenceless state of the Empire. That the system by which the Volunteers are administered is faulty cannot be denied; but surely the Army suffers from a like cause. When we consider how the Volunteers have attained their present position; when we bear in mind the persistency with which they have striven to obtain concession after concession, with the view to improve their military efficiency, we cannot fairly blame them if errors of system exist. We have now to deal with the general bearing and conduct of the officers and men who trained at Aldershot from the 9th to the 16th inst., and of these we are pleased to speak in terms of unqualified praise. The regularity with which the several battalions "detrained"—to use an official barbarism—at the respective stations, and the perfect order which prevailed during the march to their camping-grounds, was most noticeable, showing, as it did, the vast strides which have been made of late years in the discipline of the force. Guards were mounted throughout the week, and all the duties of camp-life performed with perfect cheerfulness. In very few instances were the bounds of military decorum overstepped. Officers in uniform were saluted with a punctiliousness which some regular soldiers might copy with advantage. Drunkenness was conspicuous by its absence, and straggling in the field of rare occurrence, the great heat notwithstanding. When it is remembered that most of the battalions were "scratch lots," made up of detachments from several corps, and that commanding officers had to depend, to a large extent, upon the support of company officers who were strangers to them, it is, we hold, most creditable to the Volunteer Service generally that discipline should have been so well maintained. So long as the present spirit pervades the Volunteers, there is little fear of the force losing its popularity, or falling into disrepute. Step by step it is advancing. The progress it has made has been a sure progress, and the time is not far distant, we believe, when the Volunteers will occupy a much more clearly defined position among the defences of the Empire. The material of which the force is composed is excellent, and if in some cases the officers are not what they should be, the fault rests with the public, who speak slightingly of the services these officers render, and not with the force itself. There are not wanting signs that a far better class of officers are being obtained, but much will have to be done in the way of weeding some provincial regiments before any material reaction sets in under this head. We have not, however, to deal now with the weak points in the Volunteer organisation, but to review the performance of those who were under arms at Aldershot last week. We have no hesitation is saying that nothing could have been more encouraging than the way in which all ranks acquitted themselves. The Army is universally admitted to be in a miserable state. Filled with striplings, our Line regiments are little more than nurseries. There is not a battalion on home service fit to take the field. Complaints are general as to the complete collapse of all recent innovations. Amidst all this military degeneracy, it is satisfactory to find that there is one service which is at least not losing ground. The utmost has been done to kill it; but, thanks to its inherent vitality, it has been able to hold its own, and promises one day to develope into a really valuable organisation, capable of performing the work that it has shown itself only too anxious to undertake. In saying what we have said, we would not have it supposed that we consider the Volunteers by any means what they should be; but, in justice to the force, which has had to overcome all manner of difficulties, and put up with every form of indignity, we candidly confess that we admire the determination of those who have stuck to it through good report and evil report, and brought it, by their persistent energy, to a state of efficiency which gives promise of future progress, if not ultimate perfection.

PRIOR to 1879, the Navy was left without instructions for officers, except such as might be ascertained after much difficulty, by comparing the Admiralty Instructions of 1861 with divers addenda and some hundreds of circulars. The advent of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions of 1879 was hailed with delight by the whole service; and as a revision was entirely satisfactory—when, in the course of a year, subsequent circulars and orders were embodied in an addendum (1880)—it seemed as if this most useful method of collating additional information was to be continued annually so as to keep officers conversant with the oftentimes obscure alterations made by Admiralty minutes, or to be found in the recesses of bulky circulars. But when 1881 came, and no addenda; 1882 likewise, 1883 with the note on some order, "these rules will be embodied in the forthcoming addenda," and now 1884 drawing towards its end without the "forthcoming addenda" appearing above the horizon, it is time to inquire to what this delay is attributable. The case lies in a nutshell. The compilation of the addenda is entrusted to a retired officer of large experience and meritorious services, instead of being entrusted to a standing Committee at the Admiralty. What with three feet thick of circulars, without any index whatsoever, port, station, and standing orders, general memos., and the addenda of 1880, we do not believe that there is a single officer in the entire Navy who can at once state what is the law on a given subject; or who should be able to state the rules, chapter, verse, or circular for the same. Of late years a most unusual activity has prevailed at Whitehall as regards the issue of circulars, some of which have actually reached 80 pages in thickness, so that practically whole chapters, and those most important ones, in the Admiralty Instructions, have ceased to exist, and the various and manifold amendments which have taken place should at once be promulgated, either in the form of an addendum or of a new book of instructions. We understand that the Steam Reserve Instructions, which have been under revision for some months past, are nearly ready for the printers. We congratulate Captain Colomb and the officers who have so ably assisted him upon the speed with which this revision has been completed; it contrasts well with the dilatoriness shown at the Admiralty in bringing out that more necessary work, the Addenda to the Admiralty Instructions. Should Mr. Fegan require an assistant in the work he is engaged upon the Admiralty know where they can put their finger on an able and efficient officer, who is quite capable of filling the post to their entire satisfaction, and who would not allow the grass to grow under his feet. We have heard that the proofs of the new addenda are in existence, but that is so old a story that we are very much inclined to discredit the yarn. At all events, in the interests of the Navy, we must impress upon the authorities the absolute necessity of a new set of Instructions being issued in such a form as to be easily accessible and intelligible.

WE have before us the Report of the Committee of the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury on "the Spiritual Condition of the English Soldiers." The Committee was appointed in answer to a petition signed by "a large number of officers, chaplains, and others connected with the Army, praying Convocation to suggest remedies to meet a deficiency in maintaining spiritual life therein." As far as dignity, talent, and zeal are concerned, undoubtedly the Committee has much to recommend it, for it is formed of four bishops, three archdeacons, six canons, one prebendary, a chancellor, and the prolocutor—the chairman, the Bishop of Nottingham, the noble brother of a noble soldier. That a body of Clergy, who have always been engaged with civilians, should know from experience anything of the spiritual state of our troops, no one would expect. The only way they could form an opinion of any value would be through information obtained from those who had long known and studied the working of the Chaplains' Department of the Army. Great credit is therefore due to the Committee for having secured much valuable evidence, and hearty public thanks do they deserve for the suggestions they have so earnestly and unanimously made. True, as we go through the eleven pages we find very little indeed that has not often been said before, still it is highly satisfactory that Convocation has given active attention to religion among our soldiers and adopted certain resolutions bearing upon their spiritual improvement. We proceed to consider the Report somewhat in detail. It first deals with Chaplains-General, and with sound wisdom strongly opposes the appointment of a bishop to that office on the ground that it is "entirely uncanonical and unadvisable also, as it severs all communication between dioceses, bishops, and soldiers, who desire to be treated like other classes of the community"; besides which, "an episcopal chaplain-general can only perform one episcopal act, that of Confirmation." No, it is to be hoped that for the time to come, the position of Chaplain-General will be entrusted to some experienced Chaplain who has served with the soldier under all circumstances, has studied long and well the Chaplains, as regards their several qualifications; and what is of still greater importance, who will carefully secure for the Army clergy physically, mentally, and spiritually fitted for their work. Whether the appointment be, as with other departments, for five years or not, is of no great importance, but that the Chaplain-General should always be taken from among the chaplains of the Army we hold to be both just to those officers and of the highest advantage to our troops. In treating of Chaplains, how they should be appointed, what their conduct and bearing, the machinery they should use, the returns they should make, and the special attention they should give to early and frequent celebrations of the Lord's Supper, the Committee speak with great force and discretion. We do not say that the Chaplains have, not many of them, done even more than the Committee lays down as important, but it is equally true that from want of close superintendence there are clergy ministering to the troops who are little qualified for their office, and some, we fear, grossly negligent, tempted, as the Report says, "to assume too much the position of officers, and too little that of spiritual pastors." It is a curious fact that so little did the Committee know of the position and pay of an Army Chaplain that they make an extraordinary mistake as to their rank and remuneration. "They rank with majors, their pay is equivalent to £300 a year." This error is to be regretted, as it may tend to mislead. A Chaplain on entering the service has the relative rank of Captain, and his pay and allowances are represented by £250 a year. Every five years that income is increased, gradually rising to nearly £600 a year, and his relative rank to that of Colonel. The Chaplain-General ranks with Major-General. The Report next deals, and that very sensibly, with Chaplain's room—places of worship for soldiers and church parades. That the Chaplain should have a room in which he can see men privately, is highly desirable, and there is much force in the remark "Chaplains should be directed by authority to give religious instructions for a certain fixed time, twice a week, to all wishing to receive it, and the men at such hours should be freed from all other duty." Equally true is it that our troops want better places of worship. The school-room is in no way a fitting house of God. For this we see no remedy, save an appeal to the liberality and gratitude of Church people. That the Government will build places of worship for the use of Church of England soldiers and for the various Dissenting bodies in the Army, no sane man could for one moment expect; but the authorities will, we doubt, not continue to meet with proportionate grants, sums provided by the faithful for building Army churches, and if Christian people really feel this spiritual want of the soldier, they must come forward liberally to meet it. As regards church parades, the Committee uphold them on the high ground that they are "a national declaration that the defenders of our country acknowledge the great fact that all power is from above, that they themselves are a part of the Christian Church, and desire to fulfil their duty to God and their country on Christian principles." They further, with sound common sense, maintain that playing appropriate marches, &c., is "a proper preface to Divine worship, and a proper sequel to it—I was glad when they said unto me let us go up into the House of the Lord." We need not enter upon other means noticed for the moral and religious improvement of the soldier, such as Army Guilds, Army Scripture Readers, Soldiers' Institutes—all very valuable if wisely conducted. They have been so often discussed in our columns that nothing new can be said about them. We readily indorse all that the Committee has recommended with respect to them, and very gladly do we admit that the Army, nay the country at large, is highly indebted to the able and earnest clergy who, after much labour and anxious deliberation, have presented so valuable a report touching "Spiritual Provision for English Soldiers."

IT is just ten years since the late Mr. Ward Hunt made his famous protest against paper ships, and now we have Lord Henry Lennox telling us, with some exaggeration and with some truth too, that "our guns are all on paper so far as our ships are concerned." We do not propose now to speak of our obsolete naval muzzle-loaders. They served their purpose in the 70's, as Colonel Maitland told us, and behaved indifferently well at Alexandria; but they are now generally condemned as far inferior to the modern ordnance with which science has provided not only ourselves, but the other nations of Europe. It is intended to arm our new ships, the Conqueror, Colossus, Edinburgh, &c., with the new 43-ton guns, and in March last Lord Hartington, in moving the Army Estimates, informed us that "ten guns of 43 tons, twenty-six of 18 tons, and 171 smaller guns of 4 tons had been supplied to the Navy," and that there were "three guns of 110 tons, four of 63 tons, besides a very large number of smaller guns in various stages of progress intended for the Navy." Now we wish to call attention to the fact that although at last some new guns for the Navy are actually supplied, while a few of the smaller calibres are even in use at this moment, the new 43-ton guns and 18-ton guns are paper guns as far as our ships are concerned. True, the 43-ton guns are mounted in the Conqueror and Colossus, while the Edinburgh is soon to receive her armament; but they are simple tubes, having as yet no breech-pieces; and though the Conqueror, which was to have been ready in March last, is, we understand, complete in all other respects, she is still in the not uncommon position in these times, "waiting for her guns." What is the cause of this delay? We were told by Colonel Maitland, in his recent lecture at the United Service Institution, that all difficulties of construction had at last been surmounted, and that we were to have the best guns in the world, though there was a rather ominous concluding paragraph, which asks the country to "grant the money, and to push the manufacture," which may have something to do with it. Of course, excuses can be made. Excuses for being behind-hand in shipbuilding, for having few torpedo-boats, for having no new guns fit for service; but this is the worst sign of the times, for, as boys are often told, those that are good at excuses are seldom good at anything else. The Admiralty are too apt to point triumphantly to the failures of other Navies. The Italian ships, we are told, are not perfectly disciplined, are very unskilfully handled, or their boilers are rapidly deteriorating, yet in 1883 they had a squadron of five ironclads at Gibraltar, the Duilio and Dandolo being armed with four 100-ton guns each; while even Alice's hero, Tweedledee, could have pointed out that "contrariwise" two of the 100-ton guns, originally intended for the Dandolo, were only then being mounted on our impregnable fortress. Again, we are told that the French have had difficulties with their gun-carriages; and that there have been delays in the construction of certain ironclads, but it is certain that they have at least sixteen 46-ton guns afloat and fit for service; while we have only the four 80-ton muzzle-loaders of the Inflexible which can at all compare to them in power, and we know from Colonel Maitland that the foreign workshops in France and Germany have been more successful than ourselves with the large steel forgings required for modern guns. This is not, we submit, a question in which we can afford to "rest and be thankful," or to contemplate without making strenuous efforts to complete the armament of our new ironclads with the least possible delay.

Commander Graham, who acted as Flag-Lieutenant to Vice-Admiral Sir William Hewett, until promoted, and who took part in the gallant Admiral's mission to the King of Abyssinia, has been attached to the Abyssinian Envoys during their stay in England.

The gradual decay of this country's naval strength is attracting much attention abroad, among all the great Powers of Europe especially. The Militaire Zeitung again dwells at length on the rapid strides made by France in the construction of her armour-clad Navy. The article concludes:—"The result is that the preponderance of Great Britain is threatened by France. England being compelled to employ a great part of her fleet in the Mediterranean and in distant countries, it is possible that dating from 1887-88 France will be enabled to oppose a fleet of 42 ironclads to an English fleet of 30, including the men-of-war required for the defence of her coasts."

The prize of £50 awarded by the Admiralty at the expiration of the late course at Greenwich for the highest proficiency in languages has been gained by Captain Grey Skipwith, of the Plymouth Division, Royal Marines.

The reports which have reached this country of an insult having been offered to the British flag by Dr. Nachtigal and the commander of the German corvette Moewe, should be received with the greatest reserve, as it is not at all probable that the German Government would authorise any act to be perpetrated by its representatives on the West Coast of Africa, or in any other quarter of the globe, that could in any way wound the susceptibilities of the English people or destroy that entente cordiale which should exist, and is so necessary to the well-being of the English and German nations. No doubt there are people who would gladly sow the seeds of discord between the two Empires.

Captain Henry C. Kane, R.N., Naval Attaché, has arrived at St. Petersburg, and has been allowed to inspect the Russian Naval Arsenals in the Baltic, and also to be present at experiments undertaken by order of the Russian Minister of Marine, which have resulted in the further adoption of the English Admiralty pattern anti-torpedo boat and rapid-firing 6-pounder machine guns.

A report recently found its way into the Press to the effect that the inner steel tube of a 43-ton gun destined for the Navy had given way while under proof at Woolwich prior to its being received from the Elswick manufacturers. We were loath to believe the report true, and accordingly made special inquiries at Woolwich, and were informed that it was "untrue," the gun whose tube had split being said to be one constructed in 1879. Now, as 43-ton guns were only "paper-guns" in that year, we have made special inquiries at the Admiralty, and also at Woolwich, into all the circumstances of the case; and we regret to find that not only has the tube of a 43-ton gun given way under trial, but that, the contractors declining to admit the fracture, the gun has been fired more than once, each time the tube giving way more and more. Why could not the truth have been told at once?

The Admiralty desire us to notify the fact that Captain W. J. L. Wharton, R.N., has been appointed Hydrographer of the Navy from August 1, vice Captain Sir F. J. O. Evans, R.N., K.C.B. This change was announced by the Army and Navy Gazette as about to take place some months ago.

The state of affairs on board the Wanderer leaves much to be desired. No less than three Executive officers have been appointed to this small craft in the short space of three months, and quite recently Lord John Hay was unable to obtain a volunteer for the appointment from among the Lieutenants of the Mediterranean Fleet. The less we say about this ship, perhaps, the better, as the state of affairs on board more closely resembles what can be read of in Marryat's novels than what any reasonable being could imagine to be possible in this nineteenth century. This is solely due to the Admiralty at all times supporting the senior officer, whether right or wrong.

Commander Eustace D. Maude, R.N., who left the Temeraire on being appointed to the Cambridge, has most suddenly and unexpectedly thrown up his commission and proceeded to America, under circumstances which, perhaps, it is better not to inquire too closely into. We deeply regret that an officer whose career in the service seemed so promising should have been obliged to take such a step.

The Admiralty have issued a revised programme of the departure of the Indian troopships. The season is to commence on September 10, when the Malabar sails for Bombay. She will be followed by three other ships, and the season will terminate on May 16. The Euphrates is held in reserve.

Portsmouth has been unusually lively of late, having instituted a "week" of aquatic and other sports, including some good yacht and boat-racing, several displays of fireworks, and the usual dockyard regatta, which, though not strictly speaking a part of the "week," came off on the Friday. The weather was almost all that could be desired, and the attendance at the various entertainments proportionately large. The last two days of the present week have been devoted to a Naval and Military athletic meeting, which is well supported, and has been a great success. The dockyard jetties have been well lined during the week, the only gap being at the sheer-jetty, which is being reconstructed, and where a melancholy accident occurred last week, a young workman being instantaneously killed by the fall of a derrick. The Camperdown has some of her upper deck beams in position, and begins to fill the building-shed, the frames only clearing the iron supports of the roof by a foot or two on either side. The Impérieuse, still in No. 11 dock, is being completed with as much despatch as the complex nature of her fittings will permit. The Calliope is also being finished in dock. The Donegal, under the sheers in the large basin, is being prepared to take her place as the torpedo school. The Polyphemus is in the steam basin, having some slight defects remedied after her trials. The temperature below, when the fires were being forced, was something more than human beings could be expected to sustain for any length of time, and this not only in the stoke-hole, but on the mess-deck (or what serves for a mess-deck). The galley being below, of course makes it more unbearable. There is some likelihood of this vessel being paid off when her trials are completed; she will probably then be relegated to obscurity in a corner of some dockyard. The Victoria and Albert is still getting in her machinery in the steam basin. The Canada is refitting, considerable repairs being necessary aloft. The Blazer, gunboat, went out on Friday for some trials with a new Vavasseur carriage and slide for 5-in. guns; and the Handy, gun barge, alongside the North Wall, is still undergoing such experimental alterations as are deemed necessary for the satisfactory solution of the problem of working the 43-ton gun. The Skylark, gunboat, after many vicissitudes, is once more attached to the Excellent, armed with six new 4-in. breech-loading guns, for practice; probably the best arrangement yet adopted in the Excellent for carrying out the target practice at Spithead, and a good deal more practice is necessary, if we are to judge by the ridiculously small per-centage of hits on the large floating target a short time since, at a very moderate range. The huge mud bank to the north of the Excellent, formed principally of the excavations from the large new basins, is gradually assuming a very neat and businesslike aspect. A large building is being erected, to combine the uses of the various straggling huts and houses which have hitherto existed there; and the great mud mound is being squared off and turfed at the side. Considerable improvements are also being effected in the rifle ranges, and the pier is being rebuilt and extended. It does not appear to be quite settled as yet where the gunnery school is to go, when it is no longer possible to keep the Excellent in her present position; this will be in about eighteen months, or less.

There having been a good deal of sickness in the last year or two among the young officers at Greenwich and Portsmouth, they have been informed that in future the plan will be adopted of discharging them to the shore at an earlier date than has hitherto been the case. The wisdom of this course of procedure is not very apparent, as it is to be feared that the ill-health of the young officers is only a natural consequence of the folly of some recent legislation.

Admiral Courbet has been ordered by the French Government to commence the bombardment of the Chinese Arsenal at Foochow on Thursday, and to destroy the war material and stores, worth about a thousand millions of francs. Admiral Courbet is then to occupy the port and mines of Kelung, until the indemnity claimed by France has been paid.

Colonel T. F. Lloyd, lately commanding the Guildford regimental district, has, we understand, been offered an appointment on the Congo.

The Staff Serjeants of the Army Hospital Corps are greatly disappointed to find that they are not to receive the rank of Quartermaster-Serjeant after six years' continuous service as Staff Serjeant. Those non-commissioned officers are classified for pension under Class I. with six years' service as a Staff Serjeant, but do not derive any benefit whilst serving; and now that a Warrant officer can remain till he is 50 years of age, the chances of promotion to higher rank are less than under the old regulations. The same grievance—and it may rightly be termed one—applies to 3rd-class Master Gunners, who have no possible chance of rising to the rank of Warrant officer, as those of the 1st and 2nd class are retained till 50 years of age, and in some instances for a further five years. Unless some inducement is offered for non-commissioned officers of all branches of the Service to remain on completion of 21 years, there will be a greater dearth of old non-commissioned officers than now exists.

The 1st and 2nd Life Guards have been ordered to carry out their musketry practice at Aldershot, and will arrive there for this purpose, a squadron at a time, dismounted.

Officers retired from the Auxiliary Forces who may be granted commissions in the Reserve of Officers are to wear the uniform of the corps in which they last served, with the word "Reserve" below the badges of rank on the shoulder-straps in silver, or silver embroidery, on garments for which gold shoulder-straps are authorised, and in gilt metal, or gold embroidery on garments for which cloth straps are authorised.

Captain Swaine, 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers, has been appointed Brigade-Major at Cyprus.

A correspondent, referring to an article on the late Sir W. Codrington in this journal a fortnight ago, sends us an extract from a contemporary, in which a list of officers still living who commanded Brigades and Divisions in the Crimea is given as a correction of a remark in the Army and Navy Gazette that, with the exception of Lord Lucan, all the Brigadiers and Divisional Generals of the Crimea had passed away. The sentence was not intended to convey the meaning that all the officers who succeeded to Brigades and Divisions in the course of the war were dead; but we intended to say, as might have been deduced from the context, that none of the original Brigadiers and Divisional Generals—save Lord Lucan—who landed with the Army in the Crimea were alive. We admit that, in one instance, we were wrong. The Duke of Cambridge still lives; and we hope he may long continue to do his Queen and country service in his high command. But his Royal Highness left the Crimea after the battle of Inkerman. His Brigadiers, Bentinck and Campbell (Lord Clyde), are no more. The other officers named by the Whitehall Review are nil ad rem in this connection. Sir D. Lysons and Sir C. Straubenzee were not Brigadiers of the Light Division till after the last battle had been fought with the enemy. The original Brigadiers of the Light Division, Buller and Codrington, as well as the General Brown, are no more. Sir A. Spencer, Sir F. Horn, Sir A. Lawrence, and Sir D. Cameron were promoted to command Brigades at various periods of the siege and of the war. De Lacy Evans, of the 2nd Division, and his Brigadiers, Adams and Pennefather; Sir R. England, of the 3rd Division, and his Brigadiers, Eyre and Campbell; Sir George Cathcart, of the 4th Division, and his Brigadiers, Torrens and Goldie, have all departed. The Duke of Cambridge and Lord Lucan, as far as we know, are the sole survivors of the Generals of Brigades and Divisions who landed in the Crimea as such and were engaged at the Alma and Balaclava. Lord Lucan was not at Inkerman, where the Cavalry were not engaged, though the Light Brigade were under fire, and suffered some loss.

A good service pension is vacant by the death of Captain (Quartermaster) G. Allen, late Scots Guards.

In cases where individuals already in possession of the Egypt (1882) medal and "Tel-el-Kebir" clasp are entitled to receive a clasp or clasps for the late expedition to Suakim, in accordance with the provisions of G.O. 99 of 1884, the "Tel-el-Kebir" clasp originally issued should be returned to the Commissary-General of Ordnance, Woolwich Arsenal, on the receipt from that officer of a new "Tel-el-Kebir" clasp in combination with the new clasp or clasps to which they may be entitled.

A new edition of the Divisional Standing Orders of the Aldershot Camp is now in the press.

The Government of India have had recently under their consideration the subject of the district command of Quetta, and as a result of their deliberations it has been decided that as the garrisons to be maintained there must as a rule form a mixed force from all three Presidencies, the command must be treated on the same principle. With this view, the district will not be considered as belonging to any particular Presidency, but will constitute a separate and detached command; and the nomination of the brigadiers and General staff will rest with the Commander-in-Chief in India, whose selection will extend to all officers of the three armies who are deemed qualified for employment on the brigade staff, whether they belong to the British or to the Indian service.

Volunteers to serve with the Mounted Infantry in Egypt have been called for from several Infantry regiments on the home establishment.

In the Army Returns, lately presented to Parliament, of the ages of the recruits who joined the infantry during 1883, but 768 are put down as under 17 years, and only 39 from 17 to 18; the bulk of those enlisted, 14,680, are stated to be from 18 to 20. Certificates of birth would, it is to be feared, a tale unfold.

A new post-office is about to be erected at Aldershot, and pillar letter-boxes placed in various parts of the Camp and barracks.

The Secretary of State for India, in consultation with the War Office, has decided that soldiers embarking for India on and after May 1 last shall only receive 25 days' pay as an advance, from which the value of ship's rations shall not be deducted in England, but will be left for adjustment in India.

The system of Musketry Instruction of the Indian Native Army has been changed, and the new system is to take effect immediately. The infantry course is fixed from 200 to 700 yards, ten shots at each distance, the extra three rounds being expended in firing at moving objects. The cavalry course is fixed from 200 to 600 yards, ten rounds each distance. The course for recruits of both arms is fixed from 100 yards to 600, ten rounds each distance. The prizes remain the same in amount, but changes have been made. Instructors' prizes, and the prize for the second best shot, have been abolished. A marksman must obtain 120 points to qualify for a prize.

The requirements of the Veterinary Establishment at present maintained in India having been found inadequate, the Secretary of State for War has been asked to send out eight more veterinary surgeons.

A French General Officer has just published an article in the France on the subject of the present state of the French Cavalry. From this article we gather that, without neglecting combined movements, special attention has been paid to the amount of endurance of which horse and man are capable. A charge, says the writer, is an exceptional matter, what is important is the duty of protecting, of exploring, and of pursuing. Such being the case, horse and trooper have acquired a special value as unities of action. Experiments in this sense are everywhere being made. After the remarkable rides accomplished by a few officers, we have forced marches executed by squadrons, by regiments, and by whole brigades. The Revue Militaire de l'Etranger recently gave an account of some of these raids accomplished in France, Germany, Russia, and Austria. The General Officer in his article tells us that "in 1882 half a squadron of the 11th Dragoons, quartered at Montauban, accomplished 184 kilomètres in 44 hours. In 1883 some regiments of the 17th Brigade marched 96 kilomètres in 19 hours, and 88 in 17 hours. These marches were renewed this year in the same Army Corps, under the direction of General Lewal. At another extremity of France, the 6th Brigade, placed in a post of honour on our Eastern frontier, executed, with its artillery and military train, a series of march-manœuvres, under the orders of General Warnet, who conceived the idea. Without giving in detail the movements of this cavalry brigade, we may say that after three days of preliminary manœuvring, during which these regiments executed tactical 'themes,' which necessitated marches of 45, 55, and 60 kilomètres, the brigade, reinforced by a battery of horse artillery, on the fourth day marched 60 kilomètres in fourteen hours. On the fifth day a regular operation of war was undertaken; the destruction of a bridge over the Moselle was simulated, and the 961 troopers of the brigade returned to their quarters, after having marched, some 82 kilomètres in 19 hours, and some 102." The general officer very warmly praises the Cavalry Committee, presided over by the Marquis de Galliffet, who seems to have inspired the whole branch of the service in question with his own energy.

The following will be the scope of the examination in Military History and Geography to be held in June, 1885, for admission to the Staff College:—1. Parts I., II., and V. of the "Operations of War" (Hamley).

We understand that if the proposed camps of exercise at Delhi and in the Rawul Pindee division are sanctioned—and of this there is little doubt—efforts will be made to get as many troops as possible together, and to work them hard for about three weeks only, as the military authorities do not wish to interfere with the musketry and other training which must be carried out during the winter months. The maximum of work will be done in the camps with the minimum of useless show and parade.

The French War Minister has now decided that the 13th, 14th, and 16th Army Corps shall not be turned out for autumn manœuvres owing to the cholera.

It has been decided that a regiment, warrant, or non-commissioned officer joining a department in India in which the serjeants are eligible for promotion to the warrant grade must, if of higher rank than colour-serjeant, sign a certificate to the effect that he voluntarily reverts to that rank. Colour-serjeants appointed orderly-room or paymaster serjeants to convalescent or other depôts will not be required to revert to serjeant.

The Spectateur Militaire for this month takes up the cudgels in defence of Colonel Dugenne, who commanded the column attacked by the Chinese at Bac-Lei. The writer denies that the Colonel, a first-rate officer, was surprised, for he began skirmishing with the enemy on the 17th, and it was not until the 23rd that he tried to force the pass where the catastrophe occurred. Colonel Dugenne had orders to occupy Langson, and he considered himself strong enough to deal with the Celestials in front of him. The Celestials, however, showed fight, the auxiliaries took to their heels, and the French column had to retreat. The Spectateur Militaire also defends General Millot against the attacks of those critics who censured his want of prudence. It says that we have yet to learn what the instructions of the General were, and that he would have been equally blamed had he moved a large force in sultry weather merely to take over a place whose gates he expected to find open.

An indignation meeting of pensioners was held the other day in Paris to protest against the Act of 1883 augmenting pensions, but so arranging matters that the veterans of the Crimea, of Italy, of Mexico, &c., that is to say, the old soldiers of the Empire, were excluded from the benefit of the new Act. The meeting, which passed off in the most orderly manner, was presided over by deputies of various political shades, from Radical to Legitimist, and all pronounced the conduct of the Government as disgraceful.

We have received a cleverly-contrived game-box which, if this weather should last, will come into great requisition. A constant current of air passes through two sides of the box, and the interior is carefully coated with zinc, or some metal resembling it. Specimens of the boxes may be seen at Messrs. Bland and Sons, 106 Strand.

"HEALTH EXHIBITION."—"Visitors should not fail to view the fine exhibit of Messrs. Rose and Co., London, of their Lime Juice Cordial and other Lime Juice beverages, at Stand No. 116, in main transept. The exhibit includes a fine display of the Jamaica Lime Fruit from which these delicious non-alcoholic beverages are made. Their Lime Juice Cordial supplies a most refreshing summer drink in water, effervescing in all aerated waters. No beverage has received higher recommendation from the medical profession as eminently wholesome."—See Lancet. No table should be without it. The Wholesale Stores are 11 Curtain Road, Finsbury.

A HINT FOR FORMING CANTEENS ON BOARD SHIP.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Provisions to a certain fixed scale are issued free to all persons serving on board British men-of-war; any portion of these provisions not required by the several messes from time to time, is paid for in money at fixed rates monthly; and this allowance is styled "savings." If a canteen is really wanted in a ship, and assuming that every member of a mess has an equal share in the amount paid to his mess as "savings," a certain portion of this sum, common to all, could be voted by each mess as a guarantee upon the working expenses of a canteen abroad, as expressed in this example:—The messes subscribe in the aggregate, say £20, in shares of not less than 5s. each; the paymaster of the ship thereupon advances the capital, i.e., £100, upon the understanding that this loan is paid back to the Crown by five equal monthly instalments from the some source as the £20 deposit was raised. In other words, the messes guarantee repayment, in monthly instalments of twenty per cent. of any capital advanced, and likewise to maintain a deposit of twenty per cent. on that capital. The capital advanced, together with the deposit, to be remitted, say, to the Army and Navy Co-Operative Society. Each mess to have a representative member, and these members to meet as convenient to determine upon the general description of articles to be ordered, not, of course, exceeding the total amount in hand, less 20 per cent. The goods purchased by the Canteen to be sold at invoice prices, except that fractions of a penny would be reckoned as a penny, and this might raise a small profit, or compensate for any slight loss on issue of articles by weight or measure. Say the £100 realised at sale £100 5s. 4d., the carriage, &c., cost £12. This £12 would be paid out of the deposit, and retaxed upon the messes, in proportion to the number of shares taken by each mess in the deposit, so as to maintain it at £20, and similarly, the small profits, if any, would be divided from time to time in like proportion, i.e., so much upon every 5s. share. The individual interest in the "savings" being equal, as already assumed, and the amount voted for shares by the several messes being voluntary, and therefore indicative of the estimation in which they held the Canteen for use, the share of expenditure from the deposit account should be likewise proportionate, the capital being turned by individual expenditure at the Canteen and again remitted, and thus, by a system of this kind, where all purchases would be at cost price, all invoices being exhibited for public inspection, the troublesome work of applying or misapplying surplus, or of distributing profits in proportion to amounts spent by individuals at the Canteen, would be got rid of. Individuals might be at liberty to order special articles for their own personal use, such as books, clothing, &c., but to do this the amount of the order would be reckoned as so many shares of 5s. each. Thus an order to the value of £1 would be reckoned as four shares, and one of, say, £2 7s. would count as 10 shares for the purpose of charging proportion of freight, &c.—I am, &c.,

MANNING THE NAVY.

In order to obtain a continual flow of men for the Navy, and also to keep our officers, men, and ships in a highly efficient condition, a correspondent suggests the following:—"(1.) Ships when commissioned should do two years' service on a foreign station, and then one year in a home port; the ships in the home ports would form a reserve that would be able to proceed to sea at about three hours' notice fully manned. On the completion of a three years' commission, the ship's company should be paid off, and return to barracks at either Portsmouth, Chatham, or Plymouth, that is, the barracks to which the officers and men would individually belong, and from there receive the leave to which they would be entitled for a three years' commission. At the expiration of the leave, officers and men should return to their respective barracks, be put on a sea roster, and go through a course of gunnery, torpedo, and signalling; should the men have finished the course before their turn for sea arrives, they would then be available for dockyard or working parties. (2.) Artificers, stokers, domestics, &c., should join barracks before embarking, in order to obtain some slight knowledge of gunnery, as at present there are about 45 per cent. of non-combatants on board her Majesty's ships who hardly know one end of the rifle from the other. (3.) With reference to the training of our boys, nothing is better than the system now in vogue, only I would suggest that a Squadron of Instruction should be formed, consisting of six or more ships of the corvette class, a third of which would leave England every year, so as to keep up a regular flow of men. For instance, suppose the Squadron to consist of six ships, two ships would leave in 1884, returning 1886; two would leave in 1885, returning 1887; two would leave in 1886, returning 1888. All boys on completion of time in the training ship should be sent for a two years' cruise in the Instruction Squadron, and on no account should they go to a reserve ship, or an ironclad, as boys are so liable to forget what they have learnt. After the instruction cruise, the boys should join barracks, and go through a course of gunnery, torpedo, and signalling, after which they should be put on sea roster. No man should be sent to an ironclad unless he has completed at least four years' man's time. (4.) In big ships as well as small ships the status of the Petty Officer should be raised, more responsibility should be placed in him, and everything done should tend to make him feel that he is a petty officer, and not an able seaman. (5.) With regard to officers, I would suggest that they should not join before 18, and that on joining they should have a thorough knowledge of, at least, two Continental languages; they should be in barracks for the first year of their service in order to obtain some slight insight into their profession; they should then go to sea for two years in the Instruction Squadron, returning to barracks to complete drills and to be put on sea roster. There ought to be no half-pay for officers, except in cases of misconduct, or own request, and all time served on full pay should be sea time. Colonial pay should be given to officers and men when serving in the Colonies, and tropical pay when serving in the tropics. All officers should be executive, except of course the doctor and the chaplain. Lieutenants of over eight years should have the rank of lieutenant-commander, and receive an increase of pay. A tropical dress is much needed in the Navy, viz., white tunic, white trousers, and helmet with blue puggaree. The undress ought to be done away with, and epaulettes worn with the frock-coat when boarding foreign men-of-war, sitting on courts-martial, &c. The mess dress, as suggested by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh and Admiral Sir Thomas Phipps Hornby, would do for ordinary evening dances, entertainments, and dinners, and the full dress for other occasions. (6.) The Departments of the Admiralty should be worked by Naval officers and not by civilians. Not only would it be popular in the Service, but it would be a saving to the country of some thousands of pounds. (7.) Dealing with the question of the Naval Reserve Men, they should be sent to sea in the First Reserve ships for a cruise of three months or more during certain times of the year, or all the year round if a sufficient number of men could be raised, and a proportionate number cf R.N.R. officers should go with their men. (8.) With reference to recruiting for the Navy, I quote the suggestion of a local paper, viz., that a guard of bluejackets, with a proportionate number of officers, should do duty at Whitehall. This would, I think, give a great impetus to recruiting. The above hints would, I think, tend to make the Navy popular among all ranks, and induce men to stop longer. The only drawback to them is the expense."

PURCHASE SUBALTERNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is hopeless now to expect that Purchase subalterns will ever receive pecuniary compensation in any shape for the money they invested in the service before the abolition of Purchase, whether for their commissions, lieutenancies, or over-regulation. These officers have been serving for the last 12 years on a lower relative rate of pay than their juniors who have joined since 1871, as their capital invested has become a permanent loss, whilst the professional career of the latter has cost them nothing for entrance or promotion. The suggestion given lately in your columns by a correspondent, that one year's service should be granted them in calculating the several periods for retirement or pension, appears a just and very moderate request, and one that would, owing to the limited number to whom it would apply, add but a most trifling increase to the Pension Fund. As your correspondent points out, a large number of this class obtained their commissions from Sandhurst either by purchase or passing the final qualifying examination, or as a reward for passing out at the top of the list. Their period of study, from 12 to 18 months, was lost to them as regards service, which corresponding time was gained by those of the same age who entered by direct commission, whilst three-fourths of the Sandhurst cadets had also to purchase their entrance into the service; those who gained their commissions by high proficiency after two years' service could realize £450 by selling out. To those of the Purchase subalterns whose advancement beyond their present rank has been closed by the new regulations, and who are now serving on to complete 20 years' service, the grant of one year, as suggested, would be of enormous gain in framing their after-career in civil life, as it comes at that critical time when a man is verging on 40 years, and to whom it is imperative to look for some employment which will enable him to live by bringing in an addition to his £200 a year pension. It would be found that only a small minority have independent means to enable them to keep up that status in society they have been accustomed to do during the last part of their lives which they have spent in the service, and to those with no prospects in the service, every year passed in it diminishes their chance of success in after-life. It should be most prominently brought to notice that under the age of 40 years there are openings in certain branches of the Civil Service and in many private employs, some most adapted for retired officers, which are closed after that age. A very large proportion of Sandhurst cadets, and also those who entered by direct commission, joined between the ages of 19 and 20. It will thus be apparent of what moment it is to them to gain one year on retirement, to seek out a new career before they have reached 40 years of age. Allowing Purchase subalterns to retire on £200 a year after 19, instead of 20 years' service, would secure to the majority this year of such great importance with reference to their future prospects. Should the weight of your representations bring this consideration to the notice of the authorities, you would only be continuing your past endeavours for a considerable time to obtain justice for a small body of officers whose claims have been most unreasonably and illogically disregarded, and who are now under a pecuniary loss by the abolition of Purchase of amounts varying from £450 to £800, which it is thus proposed to balance by a grant of one year's service, representing an equivalent in pension of £200.—I am, &c.,

MINUS £800.

The committee of the Royal Irish Military Tournament, out of the proceeds of the meeting held in May last, have granted the sum of £100 in aid of the funds of the Dublin Branch of the Army and Navy Pensioners' Employment Society.

"A Lieutenant-Colonel" writes:—"The more one sees of the new colour of our soldiers' dress, the more detestable does it appear. The general opinion amongst all classes is most decidedly adverse to the change from the time-honoured colour. This change of colour will undoubtedly have a bad effect upon recruiting. It is quite a rare sight to see Tommy Atkins with his young woman hanging on his arm. Depend upon it, the authorities never took it into their consideration when contemplating such a radical change in the soldier's dress the effect it would have upon the female acquaintance of the defenders of our country."

Com. Llewellyn Dawson, R.N., head of the Marine Survey of British India, and borne on the books of the Euryalus, has relinquished his appointment.

NAVAL UNIFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We Naval officers all look for your aid to help to solve the much-vexed question of the power of commanders-in-chief and captains to order officers under them to wear their different articles of costume together and in uniformity, or to enforce such variations and additions as they may please to approve of. With due deference to your editorial opinion, I can without hesitation state that Naval officers as a rule do not wish to wear dresses corresponding or assimilating with military uniform, and that to many the idea of "apeing" our brethren of the sister-service is especially abhorrent, as being unsailorlike and even snobbish. Neither do I think, in response to the criticism invited by you some time back, that the general verdict of the service will be favourable to those officers in command who endeavour to force those under their orders to depart from the regulations and wear fancy dresses. Some years ago the same gallant officer who not long ago attempted to enforce his views in the service, reported a lieutenant for being in plain clothes at the Royal Naval Club at Portsmouth. The committee of the club took the matter up, and they requested the officer who was obliged to report the matter to forget that he was "flag captain to Admiral Hornby when he entered the club." It is true that Naval officers at Portsmouth are allowed to wear plain clothes playing tennis, cricket, hunting, bicycling, &c.; but as to this, they say, "Thank you for nothing," for no reasonable man would order uniform to be worn when the act of wearing it would not only infallibly bring it into ridicule, but would entail an unlimited supply of frock-coats and trousers for the road, field, and chase, cut in diverse curious patterns, so that they might be suitable, if not presentable. To give you some instances, officers are allowed to wear plain clothes inside the Recreation Ground at Portsmouth, but they must not wear them before entering or after leaving the grounds. The same may be said of the East Hants Cricket-ground, at the different lawn-tennis grounds, at the places where the officers' horses or bicycles may be kept, at the club, and at a host of other places where uniform is not worn and never has been worn. The reductio ad absurdum being that wherever a Naval officer goes he must be followed by his servant with a portmanteau, or else run a risk of being reported for non-compliance with the Admiral's order. With respect to this so-called wish, I should like it to be known, Sir, that I believe that the wish was coupled with a threat that, unless the wish was complied with, the more forcible order would be given,—a case of "no compulsion, only you must." Side-arms have never been worn by Naval officers, except when on duty; and any attempt to enforce your suggestion—made some time ago—that they shonld always be worn when in uniform, would be found impracticable, and on board a ship positively dangerous. And now, Sir, I come to the question of "fancy dress," for so it can well be called. In my experience I have been ordered to wear at least twenty different kinds of head-dress,—white hats, black hats, straw hats, puggarees; but I will not enumerate them further. At the present time, I believe there are no less than five different hats and caps, "uniform," on the Mediterranean station. One officer orders that a straw hat, the service cap-ribbon, with ship's name on it, shall be worn at sea; another that gold-braided waistcoats and jackets are to be worn at divisions; another, and this is the case at present on a foreign station, orders that white ties are to grace our officers' necks. On other stations white jackets, tunics, shoes, and gauze coats, with yellow braid stripes, form parts of our wardrobes. Without trespassing on your valuable space further, I hope I have made out at least a case that the subject of Naval uniform is irrationally confused, and left to the unmeasured caprice of any one "dressed in a little brief authority."—I am, &c.,

A NAVAL OFFICER OF 25 YEARS' SERVICE.

Obituary.

James Fitz-Herbert, Baron de Teissier, late lieut.-col., unattached, died at Brighton on Sunday. He was the eldest son of James, Baron de Teissier. The late baron served formerly in the 17th Regt., and was present at the siege of Ghuznee and Khelat. He succeeded his father in the title in May, 1868.

The naval manœuvres, which are to end next week in a grand attack upon Cronstadt in the presence of the Emperor, have begun, says the correspondent of the Standard, somewhat disastrously for the defending force. The enemy's fleet being concentrated at Biarkesund, on the Finnish coast, between Cronstadt and Transund, where the Russian Squadron had assembled, the Vladimir Monomakh, the new armoured ship of the Alexandra type and the pride of the Russian Navy, left Cronstadt on Friday to join her consorts down the Gulf. On the way, however, she was intercepted by the enemy in overwhelming strength, and, according to the Admiral's decision, was considered to be placed hors de combat, and was ordered to take no further part in the manœuvres. But this not suiting the temper of her gallant captain, he took an opportunity, when part of the hostile force went out to reconnoitre, slipped his cable, and, although repeatedly blown up by torpedo boats, and again sunk by the returning enemy, went at full speed ahead, and got clean away.

"A Field Officer" writes:—"I have carefully read the instructions for the new system of attack as arranged by Lord Wolseley and General Newdigate, and, in my humble opinion, they are excellent. In the former systems officers were too much hampered by supervision of majors, and the blunders of the latter were always saddled upon the unfortunate captains. Now things are altered, and greater liberty of action is accorded to commanders of columns. This new system of attack ought to succeed."

There will be no regular manœuvres this year in France. A Brigade of Infantry will, however, operate from Sept. 1st to the 17th in the neighbourhood of Nancy. The review will take place on Sept. 17.

THE PROPOSED RELIEF EXPEDITION.

Though the final details are not yet completed, arrangements are being carried out for the early despatch of the Soudan Expedition, and an autumn campaign in Upper Egypt now seems to be regarded as a certainty.

The intelligence received from Egypt this week has been meagre.

The Standard correspondent telegraphed on Monday:—"The despatches received by the Head-quarters Staff this mail give few details of the Expedition. Their general purport is to the effect that Gen. Stephenson, being on the spot, is better able to judge than the Home authorities what are the measures necessary, and therefore he is to be allowed the full exercise of his discretion. The whole expeditionary force will be pushed forward to Wady Halfa as soon as possible, and will proceed thence to Semneh on the way to Dongola."

The Times correspondent announces that:—"The Mudir of Dongola has collected a number of boats, five hundred camels, and twelve hundred men to assist the Government steamers up the Cataracts. Five hundred more men will be ready to help in a few days."

According to the Cairo Correspondent of the Standard:—"Universal dissatisfaction is felt regarding the proposed river route to be taken by the Expedition. None of the high authorities in Egypt, civil or military, English or Egyptian, view the plan with favour." On this subject the Times correspondent at Cairo telegraphs on Aug. 20:—"The apprehensions entertained some time ago that the bad Nile might seriously interfere with the operations of the British Expedition to Khartoum are verified to-day. An official telegram from Assouan states that the Nile is falling steadily, several inches daily, in consequence of the late rising of the White Nile. The passage of the Cataracts is utterly impossible at present, and none of the steamers have as yet passed the first Cataract. In military circles in Cairo it is believed that it will be ultimately necessary to transfer the base of operations from Wady Halfa to Suakim, unless the Nile should immediately begin to rise rapidly. In the meantime, although the British troops are being moved forward with all despatch, the final word of command for the starting of the Expedition has not yet been received from the Horse Guards. The difference of opinion between the military authorities in London and Gen. Stephenson on the question of despatching rowing boats from home or utilising the local craft has led to a prolonged correspondence. Should the base of operations be removed to the Red Sea, the troops now in Upper Egypt will probably march from Keneh on the Nile to Kosseir on the Red Sea coast, and there embark for Suakim." The Cairo correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:—"It is almost certain that the relief Expedition to Khartoum must abandon the Nile route, in consequence of its having been too long delayed. The river has already fallen so considerably as to be impracticable. The Berber-Suakim route presents, however, much greater difficulties."

The Daily News correspondent writes:—"Now that Major Chermside appears to be in a fair way of consolidating the league of friendly tribes along the Berber Road, all fear of Osman Digna is said to be done away with, and it would now probably require no larger force to operate in that direction than on the Nile. In short, the growing conviction is that the force of circumstances will oblige the Expedition to start from Suakim. Major Kitchener telegraphed from Debbeh on Wednesday that the Mahdi's Emir, El Hoda, attacked and defeated a section of the friendly tribe of Sheikiyeh at Meraweh. The Emir El Hoda is marching upon Ambukol, in order to effect a junction with another body of rebels who are reported to be at Abu Taka, three days' march from Debbeh, on the Kordofan road. The latter had failed in the attempt to induce the Arabs along the road to join them. Major Kitchener states that he has seen letters from the Mahdi to the Mudir of Dongola and to Osman Digna, and also Gen. Gordon's second letter, the signature of which he has verified. The text of that letter runs thus:—'All well, both soldiers and people. Send me word how affairs are with you.'"

Sir Evelyn Wood has arrived at Assouan. Gen. Earle left England on Tuesday to take command at Wady Halfa. Gen. Buller will follow next week, as Chief of the Staff.

The following troops will start up the Nile for Wady Halfa as soon as transport is provided:—The 2nd Batn. Essex Regt., the 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, a squadron of the 19th Hussars, and a corps of Mounted Infantry (British).

A boat suitable for service on the Nile, built by Messrs. John Read and Son, of Portsmouth, has been tried in the Gunwharf, Camber. The craft is 30 ft. long, with a beam of 6 ft. 6 in., and a depth of 2 ft. 6 in. A working party of seamen from the Asia, guardship, stowed on board two and three-quarter tons of commissariat stores, biscuits, preserved meat, vagetables, lime juice, and ammunition, it being intended to allow 350 rounds of ammunition for each of the twelve men to be carried. The provisions will, it is believed, last a hundred days—the period required for going up and down the Nile. For stability the boat answered all expectations, and she was pronounced all that could be desired. Owing to the satisfactory nature of the trial, Messrs. Read will execute a large order for the Government. All the four hundred boats are expected to be despatched, with the stores for the Expedition, from Portsmouth, and the command of the force will, it is understood, be entrusted to Major-Gen. Earle, who is in Egypt. Attached to his command will be Col. W. F. Butler, C.B., and Major Alleyne, R.A., both of whom were in the Red River Expedition, and still remain at Portsmouth superintending the arrangements.

The Camel Corps of the Egyptian Army, under the command of Major Marriott, will accompany the Expeditionary Force. Sir Evelyn Wood has expressed to the Khedive his conviction that the native troops with the Expedition will render valuable service. Before Major Marriott's return to Upper Egypt he was received in private audience by the Khedive, who stated that he appreciated the valuable services of the English officers commanding the Egyptian Army, and that he congratulated himself on securing their assistance.

The 1st Division of the Telegraph Battalion of the Royal Engineers at Aldershot, ordered to embark for Egypt, will take with them 100 miles of air-line and about 25 miles of cable. It is expected that this draft will embark on board the Poonah, at Portsmouth, in about a fortnight's time.

Orders have been received at Woolwich for the 9th and 11th Companies Commissariat and Transport Corps to embark the first week in September.

For several weeks past the non-commissioned officers and Sappers of the 8th Compy. of Royal Engineers, at Chatham, which has been formed into a railway corps, under Major D. A. Scott, have been specially employed on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway in assisting in driving the passenger trains between Chatham, London, and Dover, with the view of enabling them to become thoroughly efficient in their duties before proceeding out to Egypt.

It has been decided, the Times hears, that all detachments proceeding to join the Mounted Infantry in Egypt are to be concentrated at Aldershot, and there completed with clothing and equipment. They will be attached to the 3rd Infantry Brigade as they arrive from out-stations, and will be required to embark about the 27th inst.

It has been notified to the General Officer Commanding at Aldershot that officers now ordered to Egypt are not entitled to an advance of field allowance, but if they become so after their arrival there they will receive it through the General Officer Commanding in Egypt.

A number of officers and men of the Army Hospital Corps are being concentrated at Aldershot in readiness to embark.

THE BRASSEY PRIZE ESSAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Whilst thousands are enjoying holidays at the seaside, may I invite attention to the fact that not one of the 38,000 British merchant ships carries a chaplain; and that it is, consequently, the onerous duty of the captains to minister in holy things, to their crews in health, in sickness, and in death. The schools and libraries are also managed by the officers. To supply a manual of hints, Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., gave, through the Missions to Seamen, a prize, which resulted, according to Mr. Joseph Moore, a well-known London shipowner, in "An admirable book of suggestions to captains and officers as to how to conduct their religious duties to the crews. It was called, 'Lay Work in the Merchant Navy.' It was written by a captain who had conducted worship on board his ship for many years. Such a book could not fail to do good if it could be placed in the hands of the officers. It was, however, out of print, and £150 was needed to print and circulate it on board ships. It was an excellent book, well calculated to do good, and he hoped £150 would soon be given to this purpose." Ten thousand copies of "Lay Work in the Merchant Navy" have been issued with excellent effect; but every British merchant ship should have one. Contributions to the Brassey Prize Essay Fund should be sent to the Missions to Seamen, 11 Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C., to yours faithfully,

WM. DAWSON, Commander, R.N.

The remains of the late Duke of Wellington were interred in the family vault at Strathfieldsaye on Tuesday. The chief mourners were Col. H. Wellesley, the heir to the Dukedom, and Col. A. Wellesley, following whom were other relatives of the family. Lord Methuen represented the Queen; Gen. Sir D. Probyn, the Prince of Wales; Com. Ivan Oldekop, Military Attaché to the German Embassy, the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany; and Gen. Lord Wolseley, the Duke of Cambridge. The church was draped in black. The vault in which the body was interred is situate at the north-west corner of the church. It already contained the remains of the late Duke, who died in 1831, those of his brother Lord Charles Wellesley, who died in 1858, and of an infant nephew.

Lieut.-Gen. Higginson, Col. Law, and Capt. Davidson arrived at St. Petersburg on Sunday to attend the manœuvres of the Russian Army. The manœuvres are to commence on the 20th, in the presence of the Emperor. The Eastern Army Corps will be under the command of Gen. Driesen, and the Western Army Corps under Gen. Timofeien. The first corps is composed of 31½ battalions of infantry, 21 squadrons of cavalry, and 88 guns. The Western Corps comprises 28 battalions of infantry, 24 squadrons of cavalry, and 74 guns. The general idea of the manœuvres is that a hostile fleet, with troops on board, has sailed up the Gulf of Finland, and that the troops are to be landed for an attack upon St. Petersburg. The Russian capital has not a sufficient number of troops, but reinforcements are expected by the Warsaw and Nicholas railways, and the object of the enemy is to advance and seize the capital before these reinforcements can arrive. The Eastern Army Corps is to prevent this, and to hold out as long as required.

The Conqueror is being hastened forward at Chatham for her first commission. It is believed that Capt. Lord Walter Kerr will be appointed to her on the completion of his prescribed time in command of the Chatham Steam Reserve.

The Railway Passenger Assurance Company has prepared some statistics which may prove useful. In them it is shown how much more frequent are accidents in summer as compared with those occurring in winter. This is not generally supposed to be the case, but a reference to the books of the Railway Passenger Assurance Company will show that it is.

OUR NAVAL STRENGTH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the periodicals, in your paper and elsewhere, read with interest letters and articles on Army organisation, notably "Free-trade in the Army," by Sir F. Roberts, in the Nineteenth Century, and an article in the April Quarterly Review. I also read, and try to understand, various letters and articles giving statistics concerning the navies of the European Powers. I do not fear an invasion of England, because it would be simply unnecessary, as we could be destroyed without a man landing on our coasts. Being a soldier myself, and devotedly attached to the service, everything concerning our Army deeply interests me; but I feel that our life as a nation depends not on our Army, but on our Navy. Allow me to put a case. Suppose a combination of Russia, France, and Italy against us, or even of Russia and France only. It seems to me, from what I can gather as to the comparative strength of the English and French Navies, that, as matters now stand, we are not very much stronger than France alone, and that France is determined to get ahead of us; and if things go on as they are doing, in a few years' time she will be considerably stronger than we are. Even now, in the event of a combination against us, we are at the mercy of France, and shall be more and more so as time goes on, unless an immediate change takes place in the policy of England, combined with luck in no immediate advantage being taken of our helplessness. If France and Russia determined to go to war with us, it would probably occur very suddenly. We could not afford to weaken our Mediterranean fleet; and the long line of the Mediterranean, Suez Canal, Red Sea, India, China, Australia, and round by North America must be held, or we lose our Mediterranean stations, the command of the Suez Canal, and finally India and China, so that, as far as I can understand, two-thirds of our fleet would be away from home, and the one-third left would be all we should have to defend us against the whole Naval power of France, which would destroy our home fleets, blockade our principal ports, and starve us into submission to any terms whatever within a month or so, and thus wipe us out altogether. Supposing even that Germany and Austria chose to take our side (which would be very doubtful), the whole of the French Army would be available on their Western frontiers, and the whole Russian Army on their Eastern, which would effectually paralyse both countries. In fact, what we have to fear, unless we can at least double the strength of our Navy, and that speedily, is not invasion, but starvation. If we had time given us, which is very unlikely, we should concentrate our fleets by recalling our ships from the Mediterranean and elsewhere; and if by this means we just saved England, it would only be with a crippled fleet and the loss of India, Malta, &c. I shall be very glad if my Naval friends can show me to be wrong, and that we are not in such a helpless state as I fancy. If we are, every one of us should know it.—I am, &c.,

CAVALRY IN MODERN WARFARE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I should imagine that no one would doubt that the improvements which during late years have been effected in firearms have rendered cavalry, as at present constituted, useless as a fighting arm. With some alteration in equipment and drill, might not cavalry be made to regain with the rifle the advantages which they no longer have with the sabre alone? A few clumsy attempts have been made to meet the problem by establishing mounted infantry corps. Now, mounted infantry are a force which are neither good infantry nor good cavalry. Cavalry should retain the sabre, but it should be affixed to the saddle in front of the left knee, so that the soldier may act with freedom when dismounted. A lanyard should be made fast to the near-side ring of the bit, so that in dismounting there would be no necessity to pass the reins over the horse's head before firing. They should be trained to skirmish independently, viz:—Each man should be able to hold his own horse and to fire. The advantages of this are immense. Upon engaging an enemy no time is lost by having to close in, dismount, hand over horses to be held, and run out again to skirmish. Every man becomes a combatant, and no portion of the force is put out of action by having to hold horses. No groups of horses or men are exposed as targets for the enemy. (N.B.—It is more than four times as easy to hit one man and four horses, than to hit one man and one horse.) It is possible to pursue hotly even a mounted enemy and to prevent his rallying; also to retire in face of a superior force, with some show of steadiness, and to inflict loss upon the enemy who are pursuing. Under the present system of instruction for mounted infantry a hot pursuit is out of the question, while an attempt to retire fighting would end in disorganisation and rout. A body of cavalry trained upon the principles here advocated should be able to defeat twice the number of cavalry trained under the old principles. If they should be so lucky as to meet a largely superior force of infantry and guns, unsupported by cavalry on ground without cover, they should by extending, surrounding them, and pouring in a concentric fire, be able to completely destroy them, for the reason that one concentric shot is worth a dozen eccentric shots. The cavalry soldier would be able to take up a position which would give him enfilade fire, either along the fighting line, or else with fighting line, supports, reserves, and perhaps a battery of guns as his target. In fact, he would have the whole force of the enemy to fire at, whilst they (the enemy) would only have single objects against the horizon at which to direct their aim. Of course, if the enemy had a strong force of cavalry it would be impossible to extend thus. Under certain conditions of ground it is advisable to leave horses under cover held by a certain number of men; but the great argument here advanced is that cavalry trained on this principle are at all times equal to cavalry trained on the old plan, and at certain times vastly superior. The shooting of the men is too long a matter to go into here.—I am, &c.,

The Army.

2nd Life Guards. Capt. C. A. T. Otway, of Newcastle Court, Radnorshire, who unsuccessfully contested the Radnor Boroughs on the retirement of Lord Hartington in 1880, died on Monday evening at Brighton. Capt. Otway was the eldest surviving son of Mr. W. M. Otway (formerly Hughes), of Otway Towers, Herts, and was born in 1845. 4th Dragoon Guards. The officers and men have been holding a series of military tournaments in Preston Park, Brighton, for the benefit of local charities. There was an enthusiastic audience. The musical rides had many novelties not hitherto exhibited in public. The driving drill with two field guns greatly pleased the public, as did also the club drill and quarter-staff. The whole of the programme was a novelty in military entertainments. The tournament will be repeated to-day and on Monday next. Col. Shaw Hellier and other officers took part in the tent-pegging and lemon-cutting with good success.

One squadron, consisting of the E and G Troops, will leave York on the 30th inst. for Liverpool, by march route; the remainder of the regiment will leave for Manchester, on relief by the 3rd Hussars. ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Some important changes have been lately made in the Artillery commands in India. Three of the lieutenant-colonels placed upon an Unemployed List, after having completed their five years in that rank, have been nominated for the higher commands formerly held by full colonels, a rank which was abolished in 1881. These three officers are Lieut.-Cols. Woodward, Taylor, and McCausland, and they will be posted to Lahore, the Presidency, and Aden respectively. This will send Lieut.-Col. Smithett back to Jubbulpore from the Presidency, and Lieut.-Col. Wilson to Campbellpore from Lahore; Lieut.-Col. Sadlier, commanding at Jubbulpore, will be posted to Meerut.

The Indian papers announce the death of Lieut. F. W. Birdwood, attached to No 1 Mountain Baty. at Dakki, near Quetta. The deceased was an eager sportsman, and met his death from a fall while out hog-hunting. He was the only surviving son of Gen. W. I. Birdwood, R.E., for many years Secretary to the Madras Government P.W.D.

The following General Order has been issued:—"Referring to G.O. 72 of 1882, it has been approved that for all purposes under the Army Act of 1881, the several brigades and establishments of the Royal Regiment of Artillery (exclusive of the Militia Artillery brigades) shall be constituted and dealt with as one corps; but for administrative purposes, the division of the regiment, as laid laid down in the G.O. above quoted, shall be continued. The Militia Artillery brigades of each county will, under the provisions of the Royal Warrant of June 28, 1884, be constituted separate county corps for the purposes of the Army Act of 1881, but will be brigaded with the territorial divisions of the Royal Artillery, as hereinafter detailed."

Four batteries of Artillery will be relieved in India during the season 1884-85, viz.:—I Baty. 1st Brig., Ahmednuggur; O Baty. 1st Brig., Kamptee; No. 7 Baty., London Division, and No. 8 Baty., Eastern Division, Aden; their places on the Indian establishment will be taken by the T Baty. 1st Brig., Shorncliffe; U Baty. 1st Brig., Athlone; No. 1 Baty., Eastern Division, Landguard Fort; and No. 1 Baty., London Division, Portsmouth.

The death is announced of Gen. G. Selby, colonel-commandant (late Madras). The deceased entered the Army June 11, 1830, became Capt. March 14, 1854, Brevet-Major Sept. 18, 1855, Brevet Lieut.-Col. Feb. 18, 1881, Col. June 12, 1866, Major-Gen. Oct. 1, 1877, Lieut.-Gen. Dec. 8, 1879, and Col.-Commandant March 17, 1881.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut. Nathan has been selected to accompany Major-Gen. Macdonald to the Austrian manœuvres, which take place about Sept. 7, to witness some extensive operations in pontooning with new equipment, which will this year be made a special feature in the programme.

Capt. Gore, who has been engaged for some time on the survey of India, will be attached to the Afghan Frontier Commission.

An order has been received at Chatham directing the dismounted portion of the 11th Company to be held in readiness to embark for Egypt.

Major Coaker has declined the officiating appointment of Consulting Engineer, Guaranteed Railways, Punjab, vacant by the retirement of Gen. Medley. Gen. Medley has made over charge to Capt. Pitt, who may possibly continue to act until Col. C. H. Luard is appointed permanently.

The Madras Times says:—"Col. Hamilton, who is acting for Col. Sim in command of the Sappers and Miners at Bangalore, has returned to that station from Roorkee, whither he had proceeded to sit on the Commission appointed by Government to report upon the reorganisation of the Sappers and Miners in India. We are informed that the Madras corps is to be reduced from ten to eight companies, but the number of European non-commissioned officers is to be increased. Verily, the ways of the military are passing strange! Only lately a number of European non-commissioned officers of the 42nd Company, Royal Engineers, were sent home, in consequence of a reduction scheme introduced, and now a fresh batch has to be ordered to bring up the strength."

Grenadier Guards. The 1st Batn. is in readiness to leave London for Dublin.

Scots Guards. Orders have been received for the 2nd Batn. to be in readiness to move from Dublin to London, but the date is not yet fixed. The death is announced as having taken place, in his 72nd year, at Wimbledon, of Capt. G. Allen, late qrmr., who served throughout the Crimean Campaign, including the battles of the Alma, Inkerman, Balaclava, the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and the sortie of Oct. 26 (medal with four clasps, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal).

7th Royal Fusiliers. Capt. Thackwell, 2nd Batn., has passed his final examination for the Pay Department, and has been posted to the 14th Hussars.

8th, the King's (Liverpool Regiment). Through the kindness of Col. and Mrs. Tanner, the annual regimental school feast was held on the 11th ult., in the picturesque grounds of Fota, near Queenstown. The weather was of the brightest, and the women and children with their husbands, a party of about 120 in all, enjoyed themselves thoroughly. Lieut. Perkins, 1st Batn., embarks at Portsmouth on Sept. 10 in H.M.S. Malabar, en route to Bombay, as a probationer for the Indian S.C. Gen. Sir T. Col. Cochrane, 2nd Batn., will be retired under the Age Clause in November next. He will be succeeded in the command by Col. Le Mesurier, who recently exchanged into the regiment from the 14th with Col. Whitting. Col. Cochrane's first commission bears date Aug. 1848, and the greater portion of his service has been passed in the King's. To the deep regret of all ranks Col. Tanner relinquishes the command of the 1st Batn. at the end of January next. He entered the service in Nov. 1855, and has served in the regiment from 1857 up to the present time. Col. Tanner served throughout the Afghan Campaign with the 2nd Batn. of the regiment, and was present at the storming and capture of the Peiwar Kotal. He is in possession of the Afghan medal and Peiwar clasp, and deservedly won his C.B. on that occasion. The extreme kindness and interest that Col. and Mrs. Tanner have ever displayed in all matters connected with the regiment is well known to all, and can never be forgotten in the chronicles of the King's.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Capt. and Adjt. Sewell, 1st Batn., has been selected for duty as adjutant to the Mounted Infantry in Egypt, and has embarked for that country. Lieut.-Col. Massy succeeds Col. Vibart in command of the 1st Batn. Major Stockwell becomes lieutenant-colonel.

26th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). The regiment, which moved last week to Glasgow, left behind at Aldershot a strong party, who had been selected for service in Egypt with the Mounted Infantry, but at the last moment their transfer to that branch was cancelled, and they will remain at the Camp, to await further orders.

28th Gloucestershire Regiment will, it is reported, shortly move from Portsmouth to Portland.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Edwards is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 30th Bombay N.I., on probation.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Lieuts. Browning and Reid, probationers, attached to the 2nd Punjab and 2nd Sikh Infantry respectively, are about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. It is with regret that Major Hutton's friends have heard that his health has compelled him to leave Egypt, to which he had only just returned in command of the Mounted Infantry. A correspondent writes:—"In your last number you inserted a paragraph purporting to correct the notices of the regimental services of the late Duke of Wellington given in the daily papers. But you do not appear to have consulted the Army Lists, or you would have discovered the name of the Marquis of Douro in 1828 and following years in the 60th Rifles." The 1st Batn. moved on Saturday last from Dublin to Limerick. Capt. Fenwick has been ordered to Hythe for a course of rifle practice, in anticipation of his appointment as an adjutant in the Auxiliary Forces.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Major Luttman-Johnson completes his period of Staff service as Brigade-Major at Cyprus on the 21st inst. Mr. A. H. Toulmin, late lieut., died a few days ago, after a long and painful illness. The deceased served with the regiment in the New Zealand campaign (medal). His kind heart and genial manners endeared him to his many friends, and much sympathy will be felt for his bereaved widow and family. Lieut. Ford died at Dorundah, E.I., on the 19th inst., aged 27 years. He was the eldest son of the Rev. C. H. Ford, of Bishopton, and entered the Army Sept. 10, 1875.

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. The Queen presented new colours to the regiment on Saturday last. The Queen drove to the parade, which was held in the grounds at Osborne, with the Princess of Wales and Crown Princess of Germany. The regiment was drawn up in line, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Stockwell. The old colours were trooped and then marched down the front of the line, the band playing "Auld lang syne." The regiment then formed three sides of a square, and the new colours were placed on an altar of drums. The Dean of Windsor consecrated the colours. Lieut.-Col. Guinness handed the Queen's colour to her Majesty, who presented it to Lieut. Campbell. Lieut.-Col. Kelsey handed the regimental colour to her Majesty, who presented it to Lieut. Monro, both the lieutenants kneeling as they received their colours. Lieut. Monro commanded the party of the Seaforth Highlanders at Windsor which bore the remains of Prince

Leopold, Duke of Albany, to their last resting-place. The Queen then addressed the regiment as follows:—"It is with feelings of deep emotion that I present you to-day with these new colours, as I cannot forget that had it not been for the great loss which we have all sustained, my dear son, or else his wife, the Duchess of Albany, would have performed this duty. From the day when your regiment first assembled on the hill sides of Ross-shire till now, when I see in the ranks before me the men who upheld the honour of the country in Afghanistan and in Egypt, the Seaforth Highlanders have ever justified their motto, 'Cuidich 'n Righ,' and convinced of your devotion to your Queen and country, I confidently intrust these colours to your charge. I cannot conclude without alluding to the mournful but honourable duty you performed a few months ago, when you bore my beloved son's earthly remains to their last resting-place, a service which will ever be gratefully remembered by me." Lieut.-Col. Stockwell replied as follows:—"On behalf of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 1st Seaforth Highlanders, the Duke of Albany's Regt., I have the honour to tender to your Majesty the expression of our respectful and most heartfelt thanks for the very high honour your Majesty has so graciously deigned to confer on us by the presentation of these new colours, which henceforth are sacred to us, and will always recall to our minds this day with feelings of true loyalty and devotion to your Majesty's person and throne. It is with feelings of deepest sympathy that we have listened to your Majesty's mention of the great loss your Majesty and the nation have sustained in the death of his Royal Highness the late Duke of Albany, and we would wish to offer our dear old colours, around which so many stirring traditions and fond memories cluster, as a tribute of mournful and respectful devotion to the memory of that Prince, who, at all times, took such a deep interest in the welfare of the battalion I have the honour to command, with the hope that, if it so please your Majesty, they may be permitted hereafter to remain near that resting-place to which, alas, it was lately our honourable, but mournful, duty to bear the earthly remains of his Royal Highness the late Duke of Albany." The regiment reformed line, and the colour party resumed its place with the battalion. Having marched past, the regiment advanced in review order, and after a Royal salute, gave three cheers for her Majesty, who then left the ground. Forty-two years ago, this battalion, then the 72nd Regt., received new colours in the quadrangle of Windsor Castle, from the hands of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. The ceremony took place on Jan. 26, 1842, the day following the christening of the Prince of Wales, when the King of Prussia, his brother, the present Emperor of Germany, and the Prince Consort were on the ground. Lieut.-Gen. Sir George Willis (commanding the Southern District) and Staff were present at Saturday's ceremony. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., colonel of the regiment, was invited to be present on the occasion. Refreshments were provided for the officers and men after the ceremony. Lieut.-Cols. Stockwell, Guinness, and Murray had the honour of dining with her Majesty, and Capt. Lendrum, commanding the detachment at East Cowes, and Lieuts. Campbell and Monro, who received the colours from the Queen, had the honour of being presented to her Majesty in the Drawing-room in the evening. The regiment will remain at Parkhurst for the present, possibly over the winter.

MILITIA.

In order to assimilate the procedure on discharge from the permanent staff of the Militia with that followed in carrying out discharges from the Regular Army, the following has been substituted for para. 138 of the "Militia Regulations, 1883":—After the discharge has been carried out, the man's attestation or attestations for the permanent Staff, and a duplicate of his discharge certificate, will be disposed of as follows, viz., (a), If a man is entitled to pension or increase of army pension for service on the permanent staff of the auxiliary forces, they will be forwarded to the Secretary, Royal Hospital, Chelsea, with an application for pension; (b), If the man is entitled to a gratuity, they will be forwarded to Adjt.-Gen. with the weekly nominal list of discharges (Army Form B 99); (c), If the man is not entitled either to pension, increase of line pension, or gratuity, they will be returned to the officer commanding the Militia battalion or brigade. The names of all non-commissioned officers, drummers, &c., discharged from the Militia permanent staff will be included in the weekly nominal lists of discharges carried out by general officer commanding districts.

The annual training of the Militia in Great Britain will be brought to a close to-day. During the year 21 brigades of artillery, 3 corps of engineers, and 103 battalions of infantry have been called out for training.

The Militia artillery brigades of each county will, under the provisions of the Royal Warrant of June 28, be constituted separate county corps for the purposes of the Army Act of 1881, but will be brigaded with the territorial divisions of the Royal Artillery.

The Times says:—"The existing vacancies in the establishment of Militia subalterns is engaging attention at the Horse Guards, and commanding officers of Militia regiments have been requested to report as to the best means of filling them."

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

2nd West York Yeomanry. This regiment has just completed its training at Harrogate. The officers were:—Major Edwards (in command); Capts. Edwards, Armitage, Foster, and Holdsworth; Lieuts. Wheatley, Morris, Foster, Hadwen, Christie; Capt. and Adjt. Thompson and Surg. E. West-Symes. The inspecting officer, Col. Lord Ralph Kerr, at the close of the inspection, addressing Major Edwards, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, said he had to return his thanks to them for having shown him that day a most excellently planned and admirably carried out field-day. The object and scope of the manœuvres were beyond the ordinary style of things attempted at such inspections, and reflected great credit upon everyone present, both as to planning and execution. He had to congratulate the regiment upon its turn-out. It was very rarely that a regiment of Yeomanry turned out in the condition in which the 2nd West York always appeared. They had all the appearance of a regular regiment. The greatest care and attention was needed to little details, and he had been pleased to note the manner in which they saddled their horses, arranged the head-gear, rolled their cloaks, &c. It was attention to such matters as those that made up the efficiency of a cavalry regiment. He was greatly pleased to see the way in which they turned out their horses. He understood there were thirty recruits this year, but next year he hoped the thirty would be more than doubled. A regiment so thoroughly efficient as that ought not to be deficient in numbers. They had a great name to keep up, and he hoped and believed they would keep it up. There was one source of regret, and that was that their colonel, for the first time for forty years, had been unable to appear on parade. He knew what a bitter disappointment it was to him. They all regretted, he felt sure, Col. Sir Henry Edwards's absence as deeply as he did. It would, however, be a pleasure to Sir Henry to know the regiment had gone through that field-day with as much credit as if he had been with them.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Hon. Artillery Company. Assisted by Lieut. Baker, Capt. Lord Headley has brought his troop of Light Horse to a state of great efficiency. His lordship accepted the command three years ago, when the troop numbered only some 13 sabres; there are now between 60 and 70. By the constitution of the company its cavalry is restricted to the maximum strength of a regulation squadron, and there is every probability of its strength being speedily attained. At the tournament held at Wycombe in Lord Carrington's park, the Earl of Harrington (who at this branch of sport is second to none) expressed himself in the highest terms of praise at the skill exhibited by the members of the Light Horse. Not since the days of Jay or Garrard has this branch of the H.A.C. so nearly approached perfection. On the breaking of camp at Temple Marlow the troop marched back to London, where they arrived without a single sore back, having made but one short halt for dinner at Slough.

1st Brecknockshire Rifles. The annual inspection took place at Brecon on Friday last. The men fell in at about 11 a.m., and marched, headed by their band, to the drill field, where they awaited the inspecting officer (Col. Grogan, commanding 24th Regtl. District). At the conclusion of the inspection, a square was formed, and Col. Grogan said:—"Col. Conway Lloyd, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 1st Breconshire Volunteers. I am glad, as inspecting-officer, to tell you I am pleased with the way in which you have performed your several movements to-day, and with your very clean, smart, and soldierlike appearance on parade. I congratulate you, Col. Lloyd, upon the possession of a very fine troop of mounted infantry; they deserve great credit for the very steady way in which they performed the movements I called upon them to do, and for their very clean and smart appearance. I also wish to congratulate you upon the change of clothing. I think that every man in the regiment must feel proud at being allowed to wear the red-coat of old England, the colour under which we have fought and won so many great and glorious victories, and which has made England what she is at present,—the greatest, freest, and happiest nation in the world."

The business of the Engineer Volunteer camp near Chatham commenced on Monday morning, when the men began work at 5 o'clock.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In an article on the late gunnery trials at Inchkeith, which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 16th inst., you observe that "one good result of these trials is that all of those who took part in them realised the necessity of having the fuzes marked with distances, so that no separate table is required by which to set them," and that "this would further permit of another improvement which is absolutely necessary,—namely, that the fuzes can be set for the range after the projectile is brought to the gun, and not, as hitherto, before the projectile is brought from below." These propositions appear to me so self-evident as to require no argument to prove their correctness. It may be seen from the published evidence given before the Special Committee on Shrapnel v. Segment Shells that these arrangements were officially proposed by me in 1869, and claimed as an essential part of my system of shrapnel shells and fuzes. My proposals were as follows:—1. That all time-fuzes should be marked with "yards range," instead of with tenths of an inch; and in order to meet the objection that fuzes so marked would only answer for one particular class of guns, I suggested the issue of paper labels to be attached after the fuzes were issued to the battery. 2. That the operations of "boring" or "setting" the fuze and fixing it in the shell should be performed at the gun, and not at a distance from it, the fuzes being carried by several of the gun detachment in convenient pouches. Although these propositions were made with special reference to artillery in the field, I have always regarded them as scarcely of less importance to the service of guns in battery and on board ship. I, moreover, stated my opinion to the committee,—"that unless these arragements were carried out, it would be better to give up the use of shells with time-fuzes altogether for service in the field." From what I have read of late in published official and other documents, the opinion appears to prevail that the setting and fixing of the fuze at the gun, at the latest moment before loading, cannot be conveniently or safely carried-out with the Boxer system of fuzes; and, also, that the adoption of a fuze similar in principle to the one known as the Armstrong E Time-fuze, is necessary to the attainment of this object. I maintain, however, and have always maintained, that my system has special merits in this respect, and this I think will appear evident from the following circumstances:—1. All that is required to set my fuze to any particular range is to bore a hole with an ordinary bradawl or bit through about one-tenth of an inch of papier-maché. 2. This operation, I have found, can be correctly performed by most men in a few seconds, if they receive a tithe of the instruction which it is considered necessary to give them in far less important duties. Indeed, the operation can be performed, as it were by instinct, if practised for a few days. 3. The powder in the shell is perfectly secure against accidental ignition after the screw-plug (which closes the fuze-hole) has been slightly loosened to admit of its removal by the hand when brought up to the gun. 4. The operation of fixing the fuze in the shell requires the use of no tool; it is securely performed in a second or two, by the pressure of the hand, with a slight screw motion (these are the official directions for fixing the fuze). 5. The fuze can be bored or set at leisure while the shell is being brought up to the gun, and, as a rule, this might be done with advantage; for, with shrapnel shell (particularly those for the heavier calibres) no great nicety is required, and it appears to me simple nonsense to talk about "altering the fuze at the latest moment," for such an idea indicates an indecision fatal to good practice on service. I desire it to be clearly understood that the fuze I have been speaking about is the "Boxer" fuze as I left it in 1869, and is not the 15-second fuze, on the Boxer principle, which was introduced into the service in 1878. I have made very strong official representations in condemnation of the details of this 15-second fuze, but I fear without effect. I have pointed out that, for purposes of war, it is defective in every essential particular. These are the remarks I made in my letter to the War Office dated March 15, 1883, on the subject:—"In 1878 I learnt, from the 'Extracts of the Proceedings of the Director of Artillery,' that, in order to attain objects which, according to my views, are of no real or practical importance, my wood-fuze has been altered in a way to destroy its simplicity in use, and, perhaps, seriously to affect its stability and uniformity of action; and I was much concerned to find that a fuze made on my principle of construction, and bearing my name, had been adopted, which has 60 side-holes in a length of 2 in., and four powder-channels. For further remarks on this subject, I beg to refer to pp. 38, 39, and 40 of Pamphlet (A)." What is stated in these pages of the pamphlet in condemnation of the fuze in question is, I venture to think, unanswerable, and certainly deserved some consideration, as coming from an officer who has accomplished what I have,—in perfecting the systems of shells and fuze since 1849. But it a remarkable fact that no notice has been taken of this portion of my communication to the War Office. I have, I fear, already trespassed too much upon your space. I will, therefore, reserve what I have further to say upon the subject for another communication.—I am, &c.,

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1884.

A SPECIAL Army Circular, dated August 20, has just been issued, inviting a "limited" number of men of the Reserve to rejoin the Army. According to the first clause, "permission will be given to a limited number of men belonging to Sections B and C of the 1st-class Army Reserve (Infantry) to rejoin the colours to complete the unexpired portion of their first period of enlistment (12 years). Men so rejoining will not be required to refund the deferred pay they received on leaving the colours." In nine other clauses the conditions for rejoining are stated plainly, if not accurately, and without any circumlocution. The purport of these clauses may be thus summarised. The Reserve men must be unmarried, of less than nine years' total service, and their characters must not have been recorded as bad; their wishes as to choice of regiments will be considered; their rank, in the case of non-commissioned officers, will be retained, and any rate of good-conduct pay received when last serving will be resumed; their army pay and allowances will commence from the day of their proceeding to join, and free kits will be issued, as to ordinary recruits. Every man will be medically examined after joining his battalion or depôt, and those who are found unfit will be sent back at the public expense, and get five shillings each, as subsistence allowance. According to the terms of this Circular, the "limited number" who may be willing to rejoin will be treated not only fairly, but liberally. But why are the services of these Reserve men required in a time of profound peace, when no cloud larger than the prospect of another Soudan expedition looms in the near future? Simply because all the vaunted schemes of the Army Reformers have failed absolutely, totally, miserably. We cannot allow them even the credit, which they have claimed, of having obtained in 1883 the greatest number of recruits ever enlisted in one year; for in 1794, when the population of these kingdoms was far less than half what it is now, 38,562 men enlisted; and, though 18,596 were killed in action or died during the year, 40,463 enlisted the following year. Again, in 1799, 41,316 enlisted. In those days, none of the special inducements now offered had been thought of, but, on the other hand, frequent "reforms" had no existence as deterrents. The flourishing condition of the Army may be trumpeted forth to the Charitable Grinders or at meetings of the Benevolent Cab-drivers; and even at public dinners, when the auditors, bounteously feasted, are more tolerant than critical, some official cock-crowing may be ventured, because despotic custom has decided against any right of reply, and because most of those who hear the plausible speech will not read the crushing comment. But the great body of officers have never been thus misled, and the reading, thinking public will not be deluded much longer. The military house of cards, the lower storeys of which were put together by Mr. Cardwell, is tottering; and though several cards, taken from different packs, have been placed around it, their support has failed to give it any stability. The gentle breeze of a "little war" in the Colonies, or even of an Indian expedition, strains it to the utmost limits of endurance, and the strong blast of an European war would level it at once. The predictions which were expressed in this paper in December, 1882, on Lord Hartington's accession to his present office, have been largely fulfilled. That Minister had not propounded any crude schemes, and he was not committed to any reckless administrative revolutions. He soon recognised the failure of the unmixed short-service system, and by permitting soldiers to extend their service, he took a decided step towards restoring the efficiency of the Army. That the great change he made has been attended with only partial success may be fairly attributed to the unpopularity of the alterations in the titles and uniforms of regiments—alterations which have not only disgusted the officers and men still serving, but have converted pensioners, Reserve men, and discharged soldiers into active agents against recruiting. The removal of these causes of unpopularity would do more to fill our attenuated battalions with effective men than any number of circulars and orders about deferred pay, localisation, and organisation. Yet every squat or lanky soldier who shows his figure, or want of figure, in a mud-coloured and grease-stained nondescript garment, does some good service by bringing to notice the deplorable condition of our "Line battalions," and so helping to compel the War Office authorities to retrace their downward steps.

The seat temporarily vacated by Sir P. Lumsden, during his absence on the Boundary Commission, cannot be filled by any locum tenens, as there is no power to make such an appointment.

It will have been observed that when the list of successful candidates for cadetships to Sandhurst was published on the 15th inst., there was a total omission of Queen's and India cadets, hitherto always given after the University cadets. Was it to torture head masters, crammers, parents, guardians, and the unhappy candidates themselves, that a change, without notice, was made? If so, we congratulate the Director-General of Military Education on his great success. But on what grounds, we would ask, has the Director-General withheld a list of the cadets from the public, a system which has met with such unanimous approval? Is it because the qualifying number of marks for cadets, which has always been 1,500, has been apparently doubled? The result of the cadets' examination has been privately communicated to each candidate, and there are three Queen's cadets, numbers 4, 5, and 6, who obtained 2,246, 1,855, and 1,583 respectively; while in the India cadets, numbers 8, 9, 10, with 2,418, 2,100 and 1,803 respectively, who are adjudged by the Civil Commissioners as not having obtained a competent amount of general proficiency. We hold that no such changes should have been allowed without full notice being given six months previously.

Major W. R. Craufurd, 91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has been appointed Provisional Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Smyth, commanding in South Africa.

The pensioners of the East London District have been transferred for payment to the Staff Officer of Pensioners, North London District; those hitherto paid by the Paymasters of the 2nd and 3rd Regimental Districts to the Staff Officer of Pensioners, South London District; and those hitherto paid by the Paymaster, 50th Regimental District, to the Staff Officer of Pensioners, West London District.

The applications from pensioners to re-enlist for the period of five years, which has recently been authorised by General Order, are very numerous, and show that non-commissioned officers are desirous of retaining their connection with the Service; but the impression prevails to a great extent that in so doing the right to pension will enable these non-commissioned officers to draw pension at a higher rate than that they have been in receipt of since their discharge on completion of 21 years, which is hardly contemplated by the authorities. Serjeant-majors of Militia, on re-enlistment, will be granted the rank of Warrant officers. This will enable them to hold that rank till they attain 50 years of age, whereas those who are now serving will have to retire at 45 years of age, rather an anomaly. Will the act of re-enlistment give to those non-commissioned officers who were colour-serjeants at the time of discharge the additional rank and pay as paymaster-serjeants and orderly-room serjeants. This is a question that arises under existing regulations.

A company of Submarine Mining Engineers is to be raised at Chatham, which will make the establishment of the Southern Submarine Mining Militia up to a strength of four companies.

We understand that Lieutenant-Colonel the Marquis of Anglesey, commanding the Staffordshire Yeomanry, has been furnished with the final report and instructions relative to the alleged disturbances during the late training. The decision of the military authorities is, we hear, that the officers concerned, Captain Parker-Jervis and Lieutenants Sir C. Wolseley and Lyon, are to be, or have been, reprimanded, and that the order is to be circulated before the next Lichfield training. Special instructions have at the same time been notified as to future conduct. It may be remembered that certain Members of Parliament, and backed up by writers in the Press, endeavoured to make out a case against the whole regiment, though two courts of inquiry attached all blame for the unseemly proceedings to three officers only. It certainly was most unfair that a whole regiment should suffer as the results of the indiscretions of a few, and the authorities are to be commended for not having shirked an unpleasant matter, as their decision will, no doubt, produce a salutary effect on the whole Yeomanry service.

Major D. F. Jones, R.A., has taken up duty as Garrison Instructor at Shorncliffe.

It is again under consideration to establish a School for Mounted Infantry at Aldershot. Although the necessity for such an instructional establishment was brought to the notice of the authorities early in the present year, and strongly urged by officers who have had much practical experience of this new arm of the service, the idea was abandoned on the score of expense. At the present time the want of such a training school is keenly felt.

The new regulations respecting examination for admission to Sandhurst which were issued in January last, and were to have come into force after the end of the present year, have just been re-issued with several alterations. In the first place, the date at which they will come into operation has been postponed to the Winter examination of 1885. So that there are yet two more examinations to take place under the old syllabus. Of the alterations in the new regulations the first we notice is the addition of one more to the list of certificates, the holders of which are exempted from the Preliminary Examination in all subjects except geometrical drawing. This latest addition is the "Lower Certificate of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, provided that the certificate shows that the candidate has obtained a first-class in each of the following subjects:—Arithmetic, Additional Mathematics, French or German, English, and Geography." All the other alterations in the syllabus of the examination are in the optional portion, all the five subjects of which are now on an equal footing as regards the number of marks obtainable for each; the number of marks for subjects three, four, and five, viz., English History, Experimental Sciences, and Physical Geography and Geology, having been raised from 1,500 to 2,000. Thus, as of the five optional subjects only one is allowed to be taken up, it leaves the candidate free to choose that subject with which he is most familiar. The choice of subjects is still further extended by dividing the "Experimental Sciences" into three distinct subjects (instead of two as previously proposed) viz.:—(a) The elements of inorganic chemistry; (b) Elementary mechanics, hydrostatics and pneumatics, electricity and magnetism; (c) Elementary mechanics, hydrostatics and pneumatics, heat and light. Another addition to the previous circular is the notification that, in either of the subjects just named or in Physical Geography and Geology, there will be a practical examination. The effect of the changes above referred to appears to be to still further widen the field of competition, and so to lead to the selection from among the candidates of those who are really and undoubtedly the best men of each batch. It is remarkable to observe that from this re-issue, "English Literature" is still omitted, though what the reason for its omission may be we presume that nobody but the War Office authorities has the least idea.

Lieutenant-Colonel R. Pole-Carew, Coldstream Guards, has been appointed Military Secretary to General Sir F. Roberts in Madras.

It has been ordered that the aiguillette worn by Queen's Aides-de-Camp shall not be worn with regimental uniform by officers appointed from the Regular Forces, Militia, and Yeomanry, nor by those appointed from the Volunteers when doing duty with their corps. This regulation does not, however, apply to members of the Royal Family.

Of all the prominent men who have died during the last fortnight, there is not one who will be more deeply mourned by the British Army than Bishop Claughton, who has been for the past nine years Chaplain-General to the Forces. Bishop Claughton enjoyed a long and useful career as Rector of Elton, in Huntingdonshire, then as Bishop of St. Helena, whence he was transferred to the See of Colombo, afterwards as Archdeacon of London and Canon of St. Paul's; but it has been in his last capacity—viz., Chaplain-General—that he has endeared himself to so many soldiers in her Majesty's Forces. Bishop Claughton was really the first to introduce the rite of Confirmation into the Army, and it is to be fervently hoped that his successor will carry on the practice, as so many men enlist just at an age when, if they stayed in their homes, they would very likely be confirmed, and who before the Bishop's time would have probably missed the privilege altogether. Bishop Claughton will be specially held in affectionate remembrance by those interested in the "Church of England Soldiers' Institute" lately opened at Aldershot. He was one of the patrons, and on more than one occasion, but notably on May 31, 1883, at Grosvenor House, he spoke most ably in the interests of the new undertaking. We can but add in conclusion that we hope that some memorial to Bishop Claughton will be raised by the British Army, to remind all soldiers of the benefits they derived from his chaplaincy.

A committee of specially selected officers will shortly be appointed to enquire into and report upon the quality of the material used in the manufacture of recent issues of Cavalry and Infantry weapons. Numerous complaints on this subject have reached the authorities for some time past, both from regiments abroad and at home, and as differences of opinion exist in certain quarters, an enquiry is imperative.

Lieutenant Viscount Castlerosse, 4th Battalion, Worcestershire Regiment, has been appointed A.D.C. to Sir H. Loch, Governor of Victoria.

With the departure of the Volunteers the Aldershot drill season may be said to have come to an end. A show of doing something is still kept up, however. Yesterday (Friday) there was an affair of outpost, in which imaginary forces were largely employed. The actual number of all ranks engaged was about 3,000 men,—the whole "Division," in fact, except the Field Batteries. The modest force now at the camp should, at any rate, be in a thorough state of efficiency, as it is well commanded by a Lieutenant-General and four Major-Generals. Drafts and detachments for Egypt early next month, will still further attenuate the garrison. The prospect is not a bright one for the few duty men who will be left in the command during the winter months.

We understand that it was her Majesty's wish that the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders should remain at Parkhurst and not proceed to Aldershot as ordered.

The arrangements connected with the new scheme for the reorganisation of the submarine mining companies of the Royal Engineers and their formation into a separate battalion are now being carried out at the School of Military Engineering, Brompton. Major R. H. Vetch will command the battalion, with Lieutenant C. V. Wingfield-Stratford as adjutant.

NEWTON COLLEGE, SOUTH DEVON.

President of Council—The EARL of DEVON.
Head Master—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll., Camb. (assisted by twelve Resident Graduates).

This School now offers a first-class education to the sons of the clergy, officers, professional men, &c., on moderate terms.

The system is arranged so as to embrace every kind of Education necessary for the Universities, Army and Navy, Civil Services, Commercial Life, Colonial Life, &c. There are Classical and Modern sides, quite distinct, with all appliances for a Modern Education separate from that required for the Universities and learned Professions.

The success of the School has been undoubtedly due to the large staff of Masters, and the individual attention which can thus be given to boys of different calibre. The New School Buildings also are a great advantage, and teaching is carried on with facility in the large, airy rooms.

After nearly ten years of work at improvements, the Council feel that they can now offer educational advantages, unrivalled in two Western Counties.

There is a School Chapel, large swimming bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, eight racquet and fives courts, 20 acres of beautifully situated playing fields, &c., and as a proof of the favour extended to the School under the present regime.

The NUMBERS have RISEN from 22 to OVER 150.

A special feature of the work is that of Preparing Boys in a Junior School for the larger Public Schools.

Since 1882, Six Scholarships have been won at Winchester and Marlborough by Newton Boys, and the work in the Examination all round has been quite up to this standard. Owing to its situation, the College has been able to render great assistance to delicate boys, and the highest references can be given on these points. Special Classes for Woolwich and Sandhurst.

"Marvin possesses a truly national and imperial spirit. It is curious that his claims to the character of a prominent authority on the Central Asian Question are admitted by the Russians as well as by his own countrymen. This is all the more remarkable, seeing that the 2,500 pages with which Mr. Marvin has enriched our literature breathe a spirit of advanced patriotism and abound in vigorous denunciation of those who, whether Liberals or Conservatives, do not rule our Empire greatly."—St James's Gazette.

The competition for the Volunteers with the 10-in. muzzle-loading gun, restricted to selected detachments, for the Corporation of London's Challenge Cup and other prizes, was fired for under conditions better calculated to test the capabilities of Volunteer gunners than last year's plan of competing at the one range only. The idea was that a ship, trying to avoid the fire from the battery, was moving in an oblique direction, and three targets were placed at 1,200, 1,400, and 1,600 yards distance, one round to be fired at each target within eight minutes, and no score allowed after the expiration of that time. The practice was, of course, not equal to what has been previously made at a fixed target, but on the whole was fairly good. The first prize went to the 1st Essex (Stratford), two direct and one ricochet hit in 6 min. 57 sec.; 1st Cheshire (Chester) made two directs in 6 min. 58 sec.; and the 2nd Middlesex obtained one hit only in 6 min. 55 sec. The first stage of the Officers' Repository Competition was also brought to a conclusion on Thursday afternoon, the Southern team, with Captain Stride, 1st Sussex (Brighton), as No. 1, performing the shift in about 15½ min., which, considering the nature of the operation, was not bad. Nine o'clock on Friday was ordered for Colonel Fox-Strangways' inspection, and half-an-hour before that time, the four brigades were drawn up in line. At the close of the inspection, Colonel Fox-Strangways addressed the officers and men, congratulating all upon the way in which the week's work had been got through. He spoke highly of the admirable discipline that had been maintained, not a single case of insubordination having been heard of. He avowed his appreciation of the good conduct of the force, in which respect they were undoubtedly improving year by year, and he considered their state of efficiency, as exhibited during the week, was far in advance of what he had before seen. Friday night, as usual, was guest-night with the officers remaining in camp, and accordingly they entertained, amongst other distinguished officers, General Sir David Wood, Colonel the Marquis of Londonderry, K.P., and General Sir W. McMurdo. After twenty-four hours' well-earned rest for the officials and camp staff, they were soon again on the qui vive, and the van of the incoming Northern division arrived between 2 and 3 o'clock on Saturday last. The number of men in camp is about 750, and after Divine service on Sunday morning, the tents, with each detachment in front, were inspected by Colonel Fox-Strangways, who than addressed a few words of advice to the gunners, bidding them emulate the doings of the preceding division. From an early hour on Monday morning the various competitions have been going on, the first in order being with the 64-pounder Palliser converted, firing shell, the principal prize being given by Sir Richard Wallace. Five prizes were awarded as follows:—1st, to 1st Shropshire, with a score of 45, three points short of the highest possible; 2nd, to 4th Lancashire, with a score of 33 only; 3rd, to 2nd East York; 4th, to 2nd Durham; and 5th, to 1st Norfolk, each with a score of 33, but in varying times. On the Marshes, from 3 o'clock, almost up to dusk, the repository detachments went on with their contest; the shift this week has been that known as the "A," and, briefly, was dismounting a 64-pounder by watered skids, constructing a temporary sleigh, and travelling the gun over a semi-circular course to another carriage parallel to the first, mounting by parbuckle, and leaving the gun in the line of fire. The principal portion of the Lancashire detachments occupied the afternoon, and some of them did fairly good time, the quickest being that by Serjeant-Major Banks and his men (16 min. 30 sec.), the Royal Artillerymen's trial previous to the meeting having occupied 15½ min., two other detachments managing to get through under 17 min.; it was left, however, for Serjeant-Major Horn, of the 3rd Kent (Woolwich Arsenal), to show even the Royals how to do the shift. This non-commissioned officer has carried off more of the badges given to the best team during the two weeks than any three other Nos. 1 put together, and when it was known that he was about to start on Tuesday afternoon, a large crowd, principally R.A.'s, assembled round the roped enclosure where the work was done. His manipulation of the gun in dismounting, when on the sleigh and again in mounting, was simply perfect, and drew forth unwonted murmurs of applause as each critical point was passed; and when, in the surprising time of 11 min. 57 sec., he had his gun in the final position, there was one unanimous shout, the Commandant, when it subsided, simply saying, "Well done, Kent men!" a few words which from him meant much. The 6th Lancashire, a thoroughly good and quiet detachment, followed, but although their work was well and correctly carried out, it wanted pace. Meantime, so soon as the Kent artillerymen had finished, the crowd began to flock to the 10-in. batteries, where the Royal Artillery detachments were assembled for their competition for the prizes given by the Association. Amongst those present on the platform above the battery were General Sir D. Wood, Colonels Lewis and Betty, R.A., and most of the other officers of the School of Gunnery. Eight detachments were entered, one each from the following stations:—School of Gunnery, Devonport, Dover, Cork, Portsmouth, and Sheerness; an amalgamated detachment of batteries serving at Shoeburyness, Woolwich, and in the Channel Islands; and the Royal Marine Artillery. The targets were placed to represent the circular course of a ship attacking the battery at 1,400, 1,800, and 1,600 yards range, five shots to be fired in 10 minutes, and any shot after the allotted time had elapsed to be disallowed. The first to try their luck were the School of Gunnery, who have before now often carried off this prize, especially in Tristram's time; but fate was against them on this occasion, and one direct hit only completed their score, a start which caused considerable disappointment. With the next detachment (Sheerness), the aspect of affairs changed, and shot after shot was put through the targets, either by direct or ricochet hits, until all five had made their mark. The result of the competition was understood to be that the Western (Devonport) Detachment had won the first prize, the Sheerness men, by whom the better score had been made, coming in second, through losing points for being overtime; but a representation having been made that the larger score should at least bring about a tie, a meeting of the Council of the Association was held, and it was decided that the two teams should compete again. During the morning of Tuesday the Volunteer competition had been with the 40-pounder Armstrong, at 1,600 yards, for prizes given principally by the Association. The shooting averaged well throughout, the first prize being taken by the 2nd East York with a score of 42, made in 3 min. 40 sec.; the 2nd Durham being second, with a like score, in 4 min. 24 sec.; the third, fourth, and fifth prizes were awarded to the 2nd East York, 1st Forfar (Dundee), and 2nd Lancashire, for scores of 36 each, the longest time occupied being 4 min. 9 sec., by the latter; and a certificate of merit was obtained by the 6th Lancashire, for a like score in 5 min. 21½ sec. Wednesday saw the commencement and completion of the second contest with the 40-pounder, this time at 2,000 yards range, the prizes being given by the Association, Mr. Steward (optician to the R.A.A.), and Major Rutley (the secretary). Very fair practice was made, and the highest scores were those of the 4th Lancashire, 30 points; 3rd Kent, 27; and 1st Lancashire, 27; the times taken being respectively —5 min. 51½ sec., 4 min. 12¾ sec., and 4 min. 36 sec. Many of the important prizes which are only decided by the aggregate of the fortnight's shooting, and in one case (the Harcourt Challenge Cup) the shooting, drill, and behaviour of the detachment combined, were decided on Wednesday, as the following list will tell:—The Queen's Prize of nine cups and badges, a special cup being presented to No. 1, goes to the 2nd Middlesex (Customs), Serjeant Lidbury and his detachment having made the best aggregate during the fortnight. The next prize in the same series is the Prince of Wales's, and this has been won by the 3rd Middlesex, No. 12 detachment, with 78 points, or three points below the Queen's. 2nd East York, 2nd Durham, and 2nd Lancashire take the remainder. Scotland's Cup, which is competed for by selected brigade detachments in the shell competition, has been awarded to Serjeant Jones, 2nd Durham, and his detachment for a score of 33. The Cinque Ports Challenge Cup, for the detachment that makes the highest aggregate with the 64-pounder Palliser gun during the whole of the meeting goes to Serjeant-Major Ellis, 1st London, and the N.A.A. prize for the highest aggregate with the 40-pounder during the meeting has been won by the 2nd East York, No. 3 detachment, with 66 points, the Harcourt Challenge Prize must necessarily remain open until the end of the Meeting. The second week of the meeting has been a successful one in many respects; although the aggregate has not been higher than last week, the average practice will be found to be better, and in repository work there has also been an improvement. Some alarm was caused early in the week by a report that a case of English cholera had been brought into camp, and so it proved, but there was no cause for alarm, that particular form of cholera not being dangerous. The afflicted man is said to have been near succumbing, but has since been pronounced in a fair way towards convalescence. Of the discipline of the camp this week it is premature to speak. Rumour speaks of cases of drunkenness which should have been brought before the Commandant, but were not; if such is the case, the sooner an example is made of these officers or non-commissioned officers who neglect their duty for the sake of shielding their men, the better for the service and themselves.

An early start for the Marshes was necessary on Thursday morning, to see the final shift in the repository competition performed, in order to decide the winners of the Association badges, and Serjeant-Major Horn and his detachment of the 3rd Kent (Woolwich Arsenal) having won the first prize this week, it remained for them to do last week's shift, and prove whether his combined times was superior to 2nd Middlesex. There was not a shadow of a doubt about the result, Horn having 26 minutes left in which to do what should hardly take 15. Although a foregone conclusion, the few who were there were amply rewarded in seeing what Colonel Fox-Strangways afterwards pronounced to be the finest piece of work he had seen during the fortnight. It was learnt that the Commandant, as umpire, had decided that the rules laid down for the R.A. 10-in. contest should be abided by, and the strict interpretation of them did not admit of any question as to which detachment had won. Sheerness put on their last shot, a "ric.," after the expiration of the time allowed, and therefore lost the benefit of it; whilst Devonport, with their three "rics." and two directs, were under time (ten minutes). The first prize, therefore, goes to them, and was well deserved. In the Volunteer competition, with the same gun, which was not concluded until nearly dark on Wednesday evening, some very good practice was made. The 1st Forfar (Dundee) made a ricochet and two directs in 7 min. 38 sec., equivalent to 30 points, and took first prize; 4th Durham (West Hartlepool) made two directs, 24 points, in 7 min. 56 sec.; and 2nd East York (Hull) made three directs; but the last shot being after time was disallowed, and they only obtained third prize. Considering that Volunteer gunners never use the 10 in. except at this meeting, and still show their ability to make good practice, it is almost a pity the authorities cannot be induced to allow a larger quantity of ammunition each year, and enable a larger number of detachments to compete. The Northern officers went to the back of the gun-shed about mid-day on Thursday, and went through the shift laid down for the competition between themselves and the Southern officers, who performed the shift last week, the winners to hold General McMurdo's Challenge Cup until beaten. Captain W. W. Clay, of the 8th Lancashire, has more than once proved himself to be a thoroughly reliable No. 1, and sustained his reputation this time. His detachment performed the shift in 9 min. 40 sec., as against 17 min. 50 sec. of the South, and were adjudged the winners; although they lost in time, it is but fair to the South to say that their points for drill were the larger number. At half-past 5 in the afternoon the final parade and inspection was held in the cricket-field, Colonel Fox-Strangways being accompanied by the Marquis of Londonderry, General Sir David Wood, Colonel Lewes, R.A., and other officers. In addressing the officers and men on the events of the fortnight, he congratulated them all upon the success of yet another meeting. Both divisions had gone through the work with the same good results as last year. The division just inspected had improved in matters of detail, such as marching, saluting, and in their appearance. The camp had been very quiet and orderly, but even in this there had been room for improvement with the Northern division. The Commandant then referred to a statement having appeared in the papers that there was a dispute about the result of the R.A.

10-in. competition. There had been no dispute and no dissatisfaction. He had referred the matter to the Council of the N.A.A. to obtain an interpretation of the rules, and ascertain what was the right and proper decision to arrive at according to those rules. He again congratulated all upon the success of yet another meeting, and, bidding them heartily adieu, hoped to have the pleasure of seeing them again next year. The prizes were then distributed by General Sir David Wood, in the presence of a large number of ladies, officers of the school, and others. In addition to those Challenge Cups already mentioned, the "Harcourt," given by the gallant colonel of that name, had its destination decided. Serjeant Aylott, of the 2nd Middlesex, and his squad obtained the highest aggregate for all competitions during the meeting, and received the necessary certificate of good-conduct from Colonel Lewes, R.A.

Reviews.

General Gordon's Letters from the Crimea, the Danube, and Armenia. By Demetrius C. Boulger. (Chapman and Hall.)—Recent events have, as might naturally be expected, attracted attention to the subject of the above-mentioned letters. They represent, we understand, the earliest correspondence of General Gordon with members of his family after the commencement of his Military career in the service of the Queen, and the compiler claims for them an intrinsic value apart from that given to them by the name of their author. He, at the same time, considers that their greatest importance is that they throw another light on the character of the man who, in the midst of innumerable tokens that an English Government fears its responsibilities, does not shrink from proving his courage and devotion to duty. In thus briefly sketching the character and actions of General Gordon, the compiler alludes to the religious fervour which has displayed itself in his more recent writings, observing, at the same time, that he is of a serious turn of mind, and not, perhaps, as other young men are. The great interest existing in these letters must be highly gratifying to the compiler.

The Asclepiad. By B. W. Richardson, M.D., F.R.S. (Gade and Caulfield.)—The contents of the third number of this medical periodical are varied and interesting. They include a paper on "Intermittent Pulse as a Sign of Disease, and its Treatment," also a great deal of information is given under the head of "Opuscula Practica," among others the important one of the treatment of nasal polypus by "sodium ethylate," in which the author appears to have been exceptionally successful.

Tourists' Guide to the Continent. (The Great Eastern Railway Company.)—Nothing can be better of its kind than the Tourists' Guide to the Continent, with its map and numerous illustrations. In a literary point of view, it would be difficult to point to anything of the kind so good for sixpence, or four times that amount.

Brigade Drill made Easy. By Serjt.-Major William Gordon. (Gale and Polden).—This very little book has been prepared in accordance with the "Field Exercise," 1877, and is well calculated to remove a defect which has hitherto existed. Soldiers, no matter what their grade in the profession may be, while devoting their attention to the study of the Field Exercise must have felt in a greater or less degree the confusing and even perplexing effect produced by the ever-recurring references which are made to preceding sections or paragraphs during the explanation of any movement. To remedy this defect has mainly caused the present work. The reader will observe that all explanations requisite for the comprehension and execution of any movement are given with the description of the evolution under notice, so much so that he can perceive at a glance the details of carrying it out.

The Army and Navy Calendar, 1884-5. By John Hazard. (W. H. Allen and Co.)—The proper title for this useful compilation should be "A Compendium of General Information relating to the Army, Navy, Militia, and Volunteers, and containing maps, plans, tabulated statements, &c." Every matter that can be possibly suggested which relates to the services is carefully considered, while at the same time the volume contains information outside naval and military matters which must be of service to the general reader.

The Reconnoitrer's Guide and Field-book. By Major M. J. King-Harman, Bengal Staff Corps. (Thacker and Co.)—This work appears to be entirely devoted to reconnoitring in India, and is based upon an idea which has been taken from one of a similar description that was formally used by the "Officers' Surveying Class at Roorkee," which was an ordinary working field-book and a book of reference in the same cover. Another very important intention of the compiler is that his book should act as an aid to the memory of many who may be suddenly called upon to make a military survey or reconnaissance, but who, from want of constant practice, are unable to remember on the spur of the moment all the points requiring special attention. There can be no doubt as to the utility of this work.

The Frontier. By Bret Harte. (Longman, Green, and Co.)—The announcement of three stories, averaging sixty pages in length, written by Bret Harte, and published by Longman and Co., is sufficient to arouse any school-boy or girl's curiosity. They must find out the attractions for themselves, as all we shall tell them is that they are full of fun, and written in the author's best style; while at the same time these stories contain not a little of what may call forth tears rather than smiles.
